Governor-General takes on political role

by Philip C. Bom

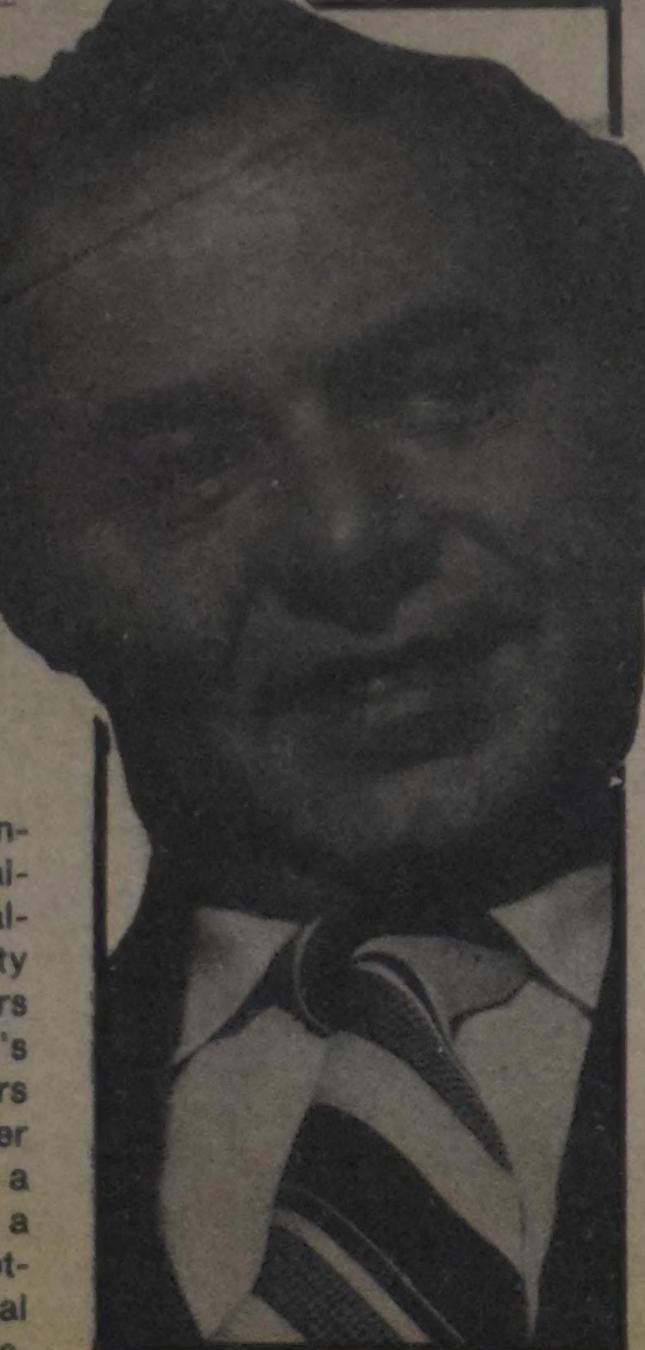

Dr. Bom is author of Trudeau's Canada: Truth and Consequences published by Guardian Publishing.

Prime Minister
Trudeau's appointment of Edward R. Schreyer
as Governor-General
was a creative choice.
The selection is crystal clear, even without a crystal tal ball. Trudeau shares Schreyer's social democratic philosophy of politics.

The appointment was generally received enthusiastically in the media. Many journalists praised his personality and family. Several editors tried to soft-sell Schreyer's socialism. Some writers hastened to add that Schreyer was not really a socialist, but a left-of-liberal, a populist, a pragmatist, "not a red-hotsocialist," "not a political ideologist," the "most undoctrinaire" politician. Ironically, such description is identical to the myth about Trudeau.

Background

Schreyer has an outstanding background for the new role of Governor-General. He has been a member of the Manitoba legislature and member of parliament. In 1969 he was elected leader of the Manitoba New Democratic Party and premier of the province. As minister of dominion-provincial relations he came to support Trudeau's "federalism."

As premier, Schreyer was the first to strongly support Trudeau's short-term strategy for a New Economic Order. Schreyer sought to persuade the national NDP and the labour unions to support Trudeau's Anti-Inflation Program as a "semi-planned economy." Schreyer and Trudeau share a belief that the "dramatic turn" from a mixed economy to a governmentplanned economy will be difficult. Schreyer said in 1976: "In fact, I'm not sure if that's going to be easy. It may not even be realistic in the context of parliamentary institutions." Also: "All I know is that what is involved here is a change of lifestyle,

a complete change of life style, and I just don't think the present style of political institutions would bring it off."

A fundamental change of lifestyle of present social and economic institutions is what Trudental change of lifestyle of present social and economic institutions is what Trudental change of lifestyle political is all about deau's politics is all about. After Schreyer's defeat as premier, the Prime Minister tried to recruit him as a Cabinet minister and candidate for Trudeau's party. Trudeau was seeking that "organic understanding" between his left-of-liberal party and the NDP, working for the union of parties into one National People's Party. Trudeau offered Schreyer an appointment on the National Unity Task Force, but he declined. Trudeau then made him an offer he could not refuse. As Governor-General, he can help work for a New Democracy in a New Society.

New role of Governor-General

The appointment is all the more significant in the light of the Prime Minister's constitutional proposals, especially the new role of the Governor-General. Traditionally, the Governor-General represents the monarchy. Under Trudeau's proposals, the Governor-General becomes the head of state. The new role will be more political than symbolic. Schreyer is expected to speak out on 'national unity.' In a minority government situation, Schreyer could help persuade the NDP to support the Trudeau government.

Schreyer shares Trudeau's commitment to entrench a charter of human rights in the constitution. Like Trudeau, he is committed to the social and economic rights of social justice and economic democracy.

Under Trudeau's constitutional proposals, a prime minister, defeated in the House of Commons, could still advise the Governor-General to reappoint him to form a government. Senator Eugene Forsey, a constitutional expert had the foresight to call this "subversive" of our system. Under our present parliamentary system, a defeated prime minister is powerless - without any power to advise. This is not to imply that Schreyer would consent to designate again a defeated party leader. However Schreyer apparently has every confidence in Trudeau. Schreyer has said that Trudeau is the best man to lead Canada. Hopefully, the new Governor-General can maintain his independence of the Prime Minister.

Some people believe that Schreyer may not have been the best choice. If Trudeau wanted a social democrat, he could have chosen David Lewis or Senator Forsey. The former NDP leader has a more objective expectation of Trudeau in power. Although, a constitutional expert, Trudeau could hardly appoint Senator Forsey, a man who has strong reservations about Trudeau's constitutional proposals.

The New Establishment

Schreyer's appointment symbolizes the New Establishment, not the old classical establishment. The Deputy Prime Minister praised the appointment as a "manifestation of Canadianism." NDP leader Ed Broadbent supported the appointment as a "very wise selection. It's a great move to legitimize the office of governor-general....' It was an ingenious move by Trudeau to legitimize socialism in Canada. The appointment is a manifestation of the success of socialism, by placing outstanding men in strategic public offices, such as in communication and culture, and councils of economic planning. Together, the New Elite seeks to achieve a planned economy and New Society In the name of liberalism and Canadianism.

A Governor-General is supposed to symbolize the fundamental values of the Canadian people. The new Governor-General shares Trudeau's fundamental values. Schreyer is Trudeau's personal choice, not the people's choice. Still, the Canadian people will wish Schreyer success in the symbolic role of Governor-General.

Shalom Manor appoints administrator

by Gerrit Otten

Mr. Otten is with the Public Relations Committee of Shalom Manor.

Classis Hamilton Home for the Aged, which operates Shalom Manor in Grimsby, Ont., has appointed an administrator. H.J. Kamphuis of Charlottetown, P.E.I. was recently selected as administrator of the home and will take up his duties in the Spring. Mr. Kamphuis has many years of experience in this field and is presently administrator and manager of a home for the aged with 135 beds in Charlottetown, P.E.I.

Since the sod-turning ceremony for the home on Sept. 30, the board has been kept busy with many important decisions regarding the progress of the home, the most significant one being the selection of an administrator.

The contracts for the 14 subtrades were awarded by way of public tendering, called by the building committee, which was assisted by the project manager, Bill De Vries.

The walls are rising from the foundations at a steady pace. The target date for the opening of the Home is July, 1979, the Lord willing.

From now on, serious applications for residence will be received.

There is accommodation for 14 couples and 16 single people in the Normal Care section. In the Special Care wing there are 14 rooms for double occupancy, plus two rooms for emergency cases. This makes a total of 74 people, when all rooms are used.

There will be a modern central kitchen, an attractive dining room, a comfortable living room, a suitable rec room, an elevator, a nursing station, a small tuck shop and a beauty salon.

On the outside, creative landscaping will turn the grounds into a park-like garden. Colorful brick will add to the tasteful setting of the building complex, even from a distance. Adequate parking facilities and a generous entrance driveway from Bartlett Ave. will complete the picture.

Since no government grants are available at the present time, some financial assistance will be necessary for those brothers and sisters whose only income is the Old Age Pension from the government. In any case, no one should be excluded from residence in Shalom Manor as long as the Christian community is fulfilling its God-given duty to care for the needy.

The deacons of many churches in Classis Hamilton are working continuously to collect donations from our people, with very gratifying results. A campaign to obtain low-interest or interest-free loans is also well underway. People are putting their money to work for this purpose in God's Kingdom.

Looking back over the past year, we are thankful for the many blessings the Lord has given us toward the realization of our goal: providing a Christian Home for our elderly brothers and sisters.

Going forward into the new year, we trust in His blessings again. Our gratitude also has to be expressed for the prayers, the help and donations made by our fellow believers. Above all, in humbleness we thank our God.

Much has to be done yet — by the board, the deacons, and by you who love this project. We continue to need your support in prayer and donations. We welcome your comments and suggestions, and will glady supply information concerning applications. Write: Shalom Manor, Box 1078, Beamsville, Ont. LOR 180 or phone (416) 563-7904.

Synod and women

In about five months there will be a gathering of 154 men, neatly seated in rows on the enlarged stage of the Fine Arts Center at Calvin College in Grand Rapids, Mich. And those 154 men will be there as representatives of their churches and classes across Canada and the United States.

They will come there armed with the Agenda for Synod 1979 of the Christian Reformed Church. Many of them will carry with them the thoughts of their home classes. Some classes will instruct their four delegates (two ministers and two elders) to speak up on this issue or to object to that report but, by and large, those 154 men will come there with their own views.

That is what happened in June 1978 and that will undoubtedly happen again in June 1979. Much of the work is somewhat routine but some of it has historic significance. Synod of 1978 was such a meeting. It will undoubtedly become known as the year of the woman for she was given the right to become an ordained deacon, "providing that her office be kept distinct from that of elder".

And that provision will come back to haunt Synod 1979. In fact, you can circle June 20 on your calendar as the date when this matter of women in office will be discussed. It might be a day sooner or later, but my hunch is that June 20, a Wednesday, will be the day.

I am tempted to launch once again into a debate about what happened at Synod last year, but I won't, simply because it was all said before. As one of those 154 delegates, I heard both sides speak effectively, using all the arguments for and against. There were hours of oratory and plain talk. Biblical reasons, both for and against the role of women as office-bearers, were given by the theologian as well as the simple farmer.

Those who spoke in favor of women as ordained deacons lost some friends that day. Long, warm friendships were broken by that discussion and they are still in the process of being mended seven months after that day on the floor of Synod.

You have read a lot about the decision already. It has appeared here in C.C. as well as official denominational papers.

As a delegate you become caught up in the tension of the debate, and the final vote with the final motion is the product of that day. Each one of the 154 men formed that decision and is responsible for it. It has taken all this time, and distance, to realize the impact of that decision and the implications. It is simple now to sit here in the quiet solitude of winter and say: that should have happened, or they should have worded that a bit differently. But that may become the task of Synod 1979.

This year between meetings of synod has been a year of discussion. I know no home, consistory meeting or congregational meeting where the topic has not been discussed. After all, final authority and implementation lies with the local church.

NEWSVIEWS

Water comes to a village

More than 2,000 people in the new village of San Jose situated in a mountainous area of Guatemala will have potable water this winter through a unique system of public fountains that guarantees them a disease-free future.

Known as the San Jose Villa Nueva water project in response to the need to provide clean drinking water for the people of this small village, who had, for too long, lived with dank, unsanitary and diseased water.

The village today, three months later, has the best drinking water of any village in Guatemala. And the cost? $71,000, which includes labor, materials and transportation. The clean water promises hope for a generation yet to be born and development for the immediate environment.

Despite the appalling conditions that a large number of the people live in, there was a lighter side to the story and in the way people do business.

"We took bids for the digging of the new well and accepted the highest bidder. These people, the highest bidders, were the only people qualified to build the well," said Paul Carrick, supervisor of the project.

With local people cooperating, a 610 foot deep well was dug and a five horse power submersible pump capable of pumping 28 gallons of water per minute was installed at a depth of 440 feet.

"We placed the well and the tank at the highest point of the town to allow gravity to feed water into the 29 drinking fountains dispensed throughout the village." The fountains had been built previously by the Public Health Department and with minor repairs were functional.

The new water system was officially signed over in October to the water committee as a public system for everyone's use.

DATELINE: THE WORLD

How do you communicate the Gospel? (5)

Contextualization is the latest "in" word in mission circles. Dr. Harvey Conn, professor of missions at Westminster Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, was asked to give a simple definition of the new concept. He replied: "In its simplest terms, contextualization means wrestling with the challenge of living as a Christian and sharing the Gospel in different situations."

Why this concern with communicating the Gospel in the context of a culture? Missionaries have personal limitations in presenting the Gospel. Consciously or unconsciously, they are representatives of their own culture. National churches have often been indoctrinated in Western ways of thought and procedures. European and North American distinctives have been transplanted in the East. The result has been a very Western looking church. But we cannot expect churches founded in non-Western cultures to adopt a European or North American tradition. We must make a distinction between Christianity and Western culture. An African or Asian, wishing to become a Christian, shouldn't have to embrace the whole of the Western value system.

Western theology doesn't speak to the issues in the third world countries. To a great extent, Western thought has remained a good academic exercise for Asian thinkers, but it has not contributed to a living theology that serves the church and her mission. Most of the theological heresies the Asian churches face have been imported from the West, just as the helpful theologies have come from the West.

The pressing questions addressed to by academics in the West are often considered irrelevant in the East. They are not where the people are at in Asian or African villages or cities.

The communication of the Gospel has often been hindered by the lack of cultural sensitivity. Asian and African Christians complain that their own people can't follow what they are saying. They feel handicapped by their Western orientation and indoctrination.

The word contextualization may be new, but the questions it raises are as old as the mission of the church. I like to illustrate this with the way two different missionaries dealt with the issues at hand.

Emde, a watchmaker of German descent married to a Javanese, worked and evangelized in Surabaya. He requested his converts to cut their hair, to replace their sarong by western style trousers, and to wear shoes instead of sandals. The gamelan (Javanese musical instrument), wayang performance (Javanese shadow play), and tembang (Javanese reciting style) were forbidden. Emde replaced through this method the Javanese with European customs and thereby "westernized" his converts. As a result, he estranged the new believers from their own community. The mistake was that he identified the Gospel with his own culture and upbringing.

Coolen, the son of a Dutch farmer and Javanese mother, started his evangelistic work in a village southwest of Surabaya. Born and raised in the Javanese culture and framework of reference, he "Javanized" the Gospel in every way. His converts would sing hymns in the form of tembang, perform Bible stories by the way of the wayang, and the gamelan was freely used in the worship services. His meetings resembled Javanese religious gatherings. Baptism and the Lord's Supper were not practiced, because Coolen feared that his converts would lose their identity and become too "Dutch". Coolen went to the other extreme. He neglected to teach some of the universal truths of the Gospel and thus comprised his Christian faith.

If the church has struggled for centuries with the question of communication, why is contextualization such an "in" word in mission circles today? Because people in the Third World are so much more sensitive, in our post colonial era, to the influences of Western culture. They want to assert their own self identity. So today, we are witnessing the emergence of Asian, Latin American and African theologies.

In December 1977, African theologians met in Accra, Ghana, in the context of the Ecumenical Dialogue of Third World Theologians, to discuss "Emerging Themes in African Theology." In a communique, they said that African theology must be understood in the context of Africa and its cultures, and the creative attempt of African people to shape a new future - that is different from a colonial past and a neo-colonial present. They believe that God is encountered in the poor of today. Theology must be accountable to the context in which people live. The African theologians see the traditional religions as a preparation for the Gospel. They also claim that theology must be a liberating theology, liberating from socioeconomic exploitation.

In the Asian church, a variety of Asian approaches to Christian theology is emerging. Contextualization is viewed as an attempt to affect an Asian expression of Christianity. Years ago, the famous Indian evangelist-scholar, Sadhu Sunder Singh, spoke of his desire to be able to give to his fellow countrymen "the water of life in an Indian cup."

Asian theologians struggle with the question of poverty, pain and suffering. The Indian theologian Saphis F. Athyal believes that Asian Christians must think through the question of Christian social responsibility. But he says that "to an Asian theologian the issue is all the more difficult as he tries to develop a theology of Christian social concern in a non-Christian and even anti-Christian social and political order." Arevalo, a Filipino theologian, asked the question: "How many of those who claim they have been changed by Christ are helping change our society in a concrete, visible way into a meaningful society?"

In their search for relevance, some Asian theologians tend to obscure the uniqueness of the Gospel through accommodating or situational theologies. Theology must be made relevant to the living situation in Africa, Asia and Latin America. But as the evangelical South Korean theologian Dr. Bong Rin Ro observed: "Bearing in mind the differences between East and West, we Asians desperately need to formulate Asian theologies which are relevant to Asians and yet based on biblical doctrines."

Hamilton Christian Young Adults seeks dialogue

Dear Sir:

What do you do when you are over the age of 21 and looking for a group of people with whom you can have good Christian fellowship? Cadets and Calvinettes have long gone by, young people's society is not your style any more and young couples is out since you are not married yet. Well, that still leaves the ladies' or men's society, but somehow that still is not quite what you had in mind at this time. What choices are left, is there no place for you?

It is really no surprise that many people are in this same predicament. Since this is the case, wouldn't it be possible to get all these people together and form a society of your own? You might think that one could never get enough individuals together to initiate such a club. Well, at least in Hamilton, this was proven to be a needless uncertainty.

The need for Christian fellowship is present in every age group. This need was quite prominent in Hamilton and surrounding areas and a group of concerned young adults decided to do something about it. Soon a society known as the "Hamilton Christian Young Adults (HCYA)" was born. I was not part of the Instigation of this society. I only became aware of it a number of years after it had started. Like myself, one might initially be a bit apprehensive about going to a so-called "Young Adults" meeting. Prior to my first meeting, I had envisioned a setting similar to your average single's bar where every male carefully scrutinizes the females and vice versa, all waiting in hope of finding a mate. Despite my apprehension, I finally decided to drop in and see for myself what these meetings are all about. I was pleasantly surprised.

After attending H.C.Y.A. meetings for a few times, I soon discovered that I actually enjoyed coming. I started to experience a new and closer fellowship that I had not known before. One thing I and many others appreciate very much is that the spiritual aspect of the meetings generally presides over the social. The purpose of having HCYA meetings is to come together in God's name to have fellowship and praise Him. This perspective seems to be the cause for growth both in attendance and spiritual fellowship in HCYA.

Adults is for anyone who wants to come. At this time, meetings are run in an informal fashion. There is no strict program that is followed and anyone who wishes to contribute something may do so. We do not like to call ourselves a "club" because this implies cliquishness. HCYA is a non-profit organization, collections are only taken when funds are below or approaching nil. It is also not a single's club; it is open to anyone, even married couples.

At the present time, meetings are held every other Sunday from 8:45 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. at the First Christian Reformed Church of Hamilton. Various types of programs are set up by a steering committee and may include a guest speaker, films, Bible studies and sharing. We try to learn new songs and we are always open to suggestions in this respect. The hall where the meetings are held has marvelous acoustics and is very conducive to singing up a storm.

HCYA tries to have a special social activity at least once a month. This serves as a chance to become better acquainted with newcomers and just to have a good time. Activities range from folk dancing to sports nights.

Once a year we have a retreat, usually in the late winter. This is a very enriching weekend for many of us, both spiritually and socially. The first retreat that HCYA had was one of the best retreats that I have been on prior to that time. It made me all the more thankful that God had provided a new surrounding of Christian fellowship for me.

Spirit is definitely present in our group. This presence is even more verified by the growing numbers of young adults that turn up at the meetings. People often drive in from a radius of about 40 miles around Hamilton to attend. Our doors are open to individuals of all Christian Church disciplines. In this way we hope to maintain a beautiful oneness in the Spirit.

The birth of a young adults society has also occurred in other areas besides Hamilton. Unfortunately HCYA has not had much contact with these groups as yet so we do not know how well they are doing. The important point to keep in mind in the formation of an organization such as HCYA is that the worship of God should be the number one priority and purpose for each meeting.

If this purpose is strived for then all other things will fall into place.

Fellowship will be good, social relationships will be maintained, singing will be enthusiastic and more enjoyment will be experienced. It is also very important to base all group discussions on scripture rather than on individual opinions. Without the Bible, one cannot hope to achieve the proper perspectives and growth within the process of living for Christ. It is also very helpful if everyone makes an effort to participate and become an active part of the group. As the old saying goes "you only get out of it what you put into it."

In the future, HCYA is thinking of sponsoring a day rally so that we could get together with existing young adults groups from other areas of Ontario and also individuals that do not belong to such a group as yet. Such a rally would be a growing experience where we could all exchange ideas, needs and personal desires. We would like the opportunity for Christian fellowship to remain available throughout every age group. I know that for many of us the need for this fellowship is there and with our own initiative and God's help there is no reason why this need cannot be fulfilled.

Church's frustrations when ministers decline

Dear Sir:

The manner in which the Christian Reformed denomination provides ministers for its vacant congregations, could be, and perhaps already is open to question. During the past year I have had the opportunity to observe two congregations who were engaged in 'calling' a minister. Only recently, one of them was refused by a minister on whom members of the vacant church had placed high hopes, for his reactions had been most promising. Having observed the members' disappointment, I would like to raise a few questions.

In the first place, when ministers consider a call are they always fully aware of the seriousness of such an action? Secondly, do they realize that their words, reactions when they visit the vacant congregation are carefully and hopefully observed and interpreted? During their visits the ministers do sometimes express great enthusiasm about the advantages which the calling church has to offer, and this can be attributed to common courtesy. However, the greater the enthusiasm on the part of the ministers, the greater the disappointment, and even bewilderment on the part of the calling congregation when they hear of the refusal. Some of these congregations, it should be reminded, have already had to do without a pastor for a longer period of time than is responsible. Indeed, when I see our ministers considering several calls at the same time, I have to question our method of providing pastors for vacant churches. I think of the vacant churches praying for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, of the similar prayers of the minister and his present congregation, and I have to fight a feeling of cynicism. Then when the refusal comes, the whole procedure can start again from the beginning. In short, the method is time consuming, frustrating, and questionable.

I would like, therefore, to suggest that a minister express a willingness to consider a call only if he is most serious about such a decision. He, too like the calling congregation, can do some research on his own before he actually enters into direct contact with the congregation. His expression of willingness to consider a call should be regarded as a commitment to accept the call. unless serious obstacles arise when he visits the congregation. Should these occur, he should share them with the congregation. The result may be fewer calls for some ministers, but also much less frustration and loss of valuable time on the part of a vacant congregation. When a congregation is in need of a pastor, such a need has to be met. It is only fair, that as a church our manner of response to this need expresses both concern and a sense of urgency

PASTORAL PONDERING

Our celebrating habits

November 5th was designated by Synod as a special day of fasting and concentrating on the problem of world hunger. I'm not so much for all these special Sundays, and I like my coffee when I come home from church. But we ought to make this a matter of everyday life-style: we must show that we are stewards of God's gifts to us.

The poor receive a lot of emphasis in the Bible. And, to whom much has been given, of him shall much be required. When we come around to the 8th commandment we hope to deal with this a bit more.

For now just a couple of (risky?) questions: Is it necessary and responsible that in our wedding receptions we spend so much money for food and beverages? Couldn't we do it a lot simpler, perhaps in the Chr. School gym, and have the Auxiliary ladies make the lunch and make a few pennies for the Chr. School?

Allow me to interject with a somewhat unrelated question at this point. We're afraid of dancing. There is reason to be. But at our receptions we have an "open bar" with a lively "stoelen-dans," and then things easily get out of hand. We start to feel good and at the same time the "embracing" can become a bit vigorous. I'm not so sure our young people can see the difference between that and the type of dance which we discourage among them. In fact, I don't think there is all that much difference. To be truthful, good responsible "square dancing" among our Y.P. without liquor is more healthy than such a stoelen-dans where the liquor flows rather freely.

We must not mete with two measures here, for our Y.P. soon see through that. I have nothing at all against having a drink at a wedding reception; in fact, I think it's appropriate.

Improving diets elsewhere

It's been several months since I wrote the last letter from Bangladesh. That was during the monsoon. The weather is considerably dryer now, although still quite warm. Soon It will be cooler. It is during this cool winter season that the major part of our program takes place. Crops like vegetables, potatoes, wheat, sunflowers and soybeans thrive during this time. Cool weather crops like wheat and potatoes will not grow at any other time since it is too wet and too hot. The temperature hasn't dropped below 70°F since last April. A typical summer day was a maximum temperature of 85-100°F.

In the past, most of the land was left fallow during the winter and farmers would only grow crops like rice and jute during the rainy season. However this is changing due to the work of many voluntary organizations and improved government programs. Bangladesh hopes to achieve self-sufficiency in wheat production by 1980. Third world countries like Bangladesh have the potential to feed themselves. Even India produced a surplus of food grains for the last two years.

At the present time we are working with vegetables. Once again the mini-kit is the most important item in our vegetable program. Every mini-kit contains small seed packets of six nutritious vegetables like carrots and broccoli. These seed packets are attached to a simple, illustrated cultivation guide and sold to the farmers at a low price. This way we hope to encourage everyone to plant a vegetable garden near their homes and thereby promote better nutrition. Sales are going well and we hope to distribute double the amount of last year.

The overall picture appears to be quite good lately. There is peace and food production is on the increase. Bangladesh has not been as badly affected as India with the floods. Let's hope and pray that this trend continues.

The support you give to your program in Bangladesh is encouraging. It is always needed and appreciated.

Eating, drinking, and our way of living

A Christian perspective of food and hunger

A seminar workshop program sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee (Alberta) was held in Calgary some time ago. Its purpose was to:

*create an awareness of world hunger — its causes, consequences and solutions.

•develop an understanding of the linkages between the industrial world and the people in the hungry world, through the medium of food.

*promote better ways of sharing world food resources.

*strengthen our christian witness and bolster our concern for the spiritual welfare of others.

*stimulate a healthy response to world hunger in the form of giving and volunteering services.

This workshop featured Doris Longacre, author of the More with Less Cookbook. Nutrition and Development Specialist in Home Economics and Nutrition, experience in Vietnam and Indonesia; and Regier, Fremont Director Agriculture and Overseas Development of Bethel College, Newton Kansas, Longterm Christian development worker in Zaire and Mexico.

A fasting project

Synod has selected next Sunday as a denominational day of prayer and fasting so that we may reflect on the awesome responsibility that we as believers in North America have in the face of the spiritual and physical starvation across the world. We urge all of you to participate. As a congregational project, we will follow the day of fasting with a week of reduced eating.

We can help the poor and hungry of the world by changes in our life-style and a good place to start is with our eating habits.

Consider, for example, our consumption of meat. Our intake of calories, particularly through meat consumption, is four times that of people in poor countries. In no way is this consumption required. North Americans now eat far more protein than their bodies can use.

Meat is not the only "culprit" in our diet. Soft drinks and "junk" foods also take large amounts of energy and resources to produce. It is important that we, as Christians, become alert to which snacks and beverages are wasteful of our resources and then cut these items from our diets. The money we save during the week of reduced eating will be donated to the synod's newly created "Task Force on World Hunger

Fund," lodged with the CRWRC.

The harvest of alcoholism

Thirteen million Canadians drink regularly, said the C.B.C. radio man this morning.

Nearly a million suffer health damage because of drinking.

Half a million Canadians are alcoholics.

In Ontario alone drinkers counted down one billion dollars for drinks during 1975.

George Kitching, chief commissioner of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, stated last month that the province expects to reap $312 million in profits from liquor sales over 1975. Ottawa takes a slightly smaller amount out of those sales as well. "Taxes have to be raised one way or another". said Mr. Kitching.

In the meantime lives are ruined by alcoholism. Among young people there is an increased turning to alcohol, drugs being harder to come by. A study of high schools in London, Ont., indicated that 23% of all students drink to intoxication at least four times a year.

Thus far we have not considered alcoholism a serious problem in Christian Reformed circles. Unless we watch and pray that will change drastically for the worse. Our members will be under growing pressure to join the social drinkers from whose rank alcoholism selects its victims.

Helping the addicts

Alcoholism is defined as a disease or disorder of behaviour characterized by repeated drinking of alcoholic beverages, which interferes with the drinker's health, inter-personal relationships or economic functioning.

An alcoholic is a person who cannot control his use of alcohol, uses it in harmful amounts so that he sometimes gets into trouble with his/her health, family, employer, police, co-workers and friends.

Alcoholism occurs in all groups, professions and segments of the community. Aland alcoholic females are an increasing problem.

PRESS PARAGE

In 1974 Canadians spent 2.6 billion (475 gallons) on alcohol. 4.5 million legal age drinkers spent 1.07 billion dollars. Of these, 328,000 are hazardous drinkers and 145,000 are alcoholics.

In Lambton County over 11 million dollars were spent on spirits and beer in one fiscal year. An estimated 5,000 alcoholics (of these 5% to 10% are chronic inebriates who have lost most things of value in their life).

During the month of July, 1978 the Sarnia Lambton Half-way House had 87 admissions. Of these, five were referred to a doctor, four to a hospital. Reasons for the referral were: fractured skull, bleeding in eyes, chest infection, nerves. A sample of other reasons for referral: lacerations, infections, drug overdose, overdose of seconal, depression, cracked ribs, etc. etc.

By organizing the collection of Dominion slips, project J.O.Y. has been able to support the Halfway House with food-vouchers to the tune of $737 so far this year. We are planning to count the slips again at the end of November, and hope we can count on your help. The boxes in each church have been provided with a larger opening, to make it easier to deposit slips in there. Thanks for all the help given so far.

plates in Quebec bore the inscription "La Belle Province". That was before the Parti Quebecois came to power and replaced the traditional message with a more politically motivated one. Quebec is still beautiful, of course, although a great deal less placid than it used to be.

Many changes have taken place here in recent years, changes that range all the way from the highest levels of politics to lowly license plates. The term Quiet Revolution is now commonly used to refer particularly to the social upheaval that occurred in La Belle Province in the fifties and sixties. In that respect the first 25 years of the First Christian Reformed Church of Montreal (1954-1979) have been most interesting. We have witnessed the emergence of a new elite among our French speaking brothers and we have already felt the impact of a new emphasis in their attitude and outlook.

More changes are still to come before the structure of a new Canada has taken shape, yet one thing has remained the same and is unlikely to change. Quebec's French society is together, unified in a way no other large segment of Canada's population is.

One of the principal unifying forces in Quebec has traditionally been the Roman Catholic Church. It still is, in spite of the widespread rejection of its tenets by the younger generation. From the earliest days of French settlement in North America, Catholicism has been the dominant religion. A number of Huguenots also came here, but their Protestantism and mercantile preoccupations made them suspect. They had too much in common with the British, and the British of course were the enemy. The persistent efforts by the English to establish economic control and a cultural monism in Canada not only created the siege mentality that served to unify the French even more, it also made the Roman Church a symbol of their resolve never to buckle under to any outside pressures.

Quebec also boasts a colourful and rich shared heritage with deep cultural roots. The French language, of course, lies at the very heart of that heritage, that culture, and French Canadians are understandably determined to protect and maintain it. That such a goal is difficult and requires special measures should be obvious. After all, not only does the English speaking population of North America constitute an overwhelming numerical superiority, the American way of life is pervasive and its levelling impact destructive.

When some time ago the CRTC imposed its controversial Canadian Content regulation on Canada's electronic media, the country tried to work itself into a flap over the issue. The new rule was called Draconian, and fears were expressed for the well-being of that popular but little understood system called democracy. Today the country is back to worrying about the economy again.

Democracy, it seems, is still intact, and even capitalism seems safe. That the CRTC ruling has been a boon to the development of Canadian talent is now widely recognized. Whatever the principles behind the regulation, the measure worked, and in North America that is all that counts. In Quebec the government has passed a restrictive language law which seeks to increase the use of French in Quebec, especially in business and education. It has ruffled many feathers. Worse, the measure is alleged to be harmful to the Quebec economy. Yet the French press has been largely in support of the new law, while even the shrill objections from the English community are becoming less strident.

I believe the French language is well worth preserving, as is Quebec's rich culture. None are more committed to this end than the Quebecois themselves. It is an ambition that functions as a powerful, unifying element among them. This strong sense of community is enhanced by the

As relatively new Canadians we may also still be somewhat objective, and our European roots may enable us to make some useful comparisons. In other words, we are probably better equipped to examine the rationale for Canada's continued existence and to reassess our own attitudes to it than many other Canadians. Perhaps we ought to have a go at it.

remarkable fact that very few of Quebec's enormously talented entertainers have decided to try their fortunes in Hollywood or Las Vegas. Many English Canadian entertainers have been "compelled" to "flee" to the U.S. In sharp contrast, Quebecers generally stay at home; their home is where their heart is.

Bound together

A single dominant religious orientation, a shared heritage, a rich culture, a common language and a common foe are the elements that bind the French population of Quebec together. These are the essential factors for nationhood, factors the rest of Canada lacks. Quebec is a nation in every sense that English Canada is not. Independence for Quebec is therefore not in the least an absurd notion. Given the history of Quebec in Canada and the emergence of a new, dynamic elite in this province, independence is, in many ways, a much more logical objective for the Quebecois than a continuation of that unworkable and onesided compromise known as Confederation.

The new elite of Quebec emerged in the fifties and sixties as a result of a remarkable shift in emphasis of the French society. As the control of the Roman church began to wane, increasing numbers of French youths abandoned the classical tradition in education. Science and Commerce faculties in the universities burgeoned as more people than ever before flocked to the halls of higher learning. When more and more competent professionals began to enter the job market, the old question of "Why should the English control everything?" was asked more and more frequently.

In a way, the awakening of Quebec's French society was similar to the feminist movement in the rest of North America. No longer would French Quebecers be satisfied with the notion that they could not do certain things as well as the English. Their newly found expertise in traditionally English sectors of business and industry made them ever more insistent on equal opportunities and, finally, on control over their own affairs.

After some 200 years of toiling in the shadow of their English managers, the Quebecois suddenly found themselves in a position to mount a serious challenge to the economic dominance of the English. When their ambitions were initially frustrated by entrenched rights and privileges, many of the fiercely proud young intellectuals joined the growing separatist movement in the province.

They had learned their lessons well: politics and economic control are closely linked, and if the traditional political parties financed by the traditional power brokers would not listen to their naively idealistic notions, they would use that same political system to achieve their ends. This they have done, and even the most cynical of political analysts will have to admit, albeit grudgingly, that the openly separatist Parti Quebecois of Rene Levesque has given the province reasonably good government in its first two years. It is an accomplishment of which Quebecers can be justly proud, and it was achieved in the face of open hostility from the English community. It is just one more element that welds French Canada together.

Given the existence of this "nation" within our country, what is to become of Canada? Unless English Canada can divest itself of its stereotyped notions of the French Canadian and develop some empathy for his ambitions, political as well as social, there cannot be much of a future for Canada even as a geo-political entity. A unified nation it will never be. Our prejudices and mundane preoccupations are too deeply entrenched to ever allow that to happen. What must occur in the next few years is a rearticulation of Canada's reason for being, and that is where Canada's Protestant community, if it can be called that, could play a leading role.

While generalizations are often dangerous, it is probably quite safe to suggest that most Christian Reformed people are pro-federalists. We tend to be conservative, in favour of maintaining the status quo sometimes even when the status is no longer quo. We are also rather cerebral; we like to theorize, philosophize, and we positively love to dabble in theology.

Why should Canada as we know it today continue to exist? Is it enough to say that it keeps us from becoming Cont'd on page 6

Americans? Some of our best friends are Americans. Our political system is dedicated to the North American liberal tradition which defines man in terms of economics, and happiness in terms of wealth. Is this worth maintaining? Western alienation is a political constant; Ontario is disliked by the people of our prairie provinces as intensely as Quebec; Maritimers feel Confederation has given them a raw deal; the anti-French backlash in Ontario is strong and at times ugly, and Quebecers are sick and tired of the whole charade. Should this really be keeping us? Is Confederation like a marriage then? Has God really joined it together and may man not break it asunder?

I do not believe the Confederation is sacrosanct. I believe that the political victory of Levesque's separatists some two years ago was the healthiest thing to have happened in Canada in a long. dull, self-deluded time. I believe this because I love Canada almost as much as I love Quebec. Canada needed to be shaken out of its self-indulgent torpor. It had to be made to realize that it could not drift on forever without direction, without purpose. It had to be made to face the unpalatable fact that Confederation had failed.

It also had to be forced into recognizing that Quebecers could no longer be treated as if they were Samaritans: not quite like us and definitely not of us. Now Canada has to be made to see that continued political union is possible and worthwhile only if a measure of mutual respect and concern can be generated among its citizens. A new constitution is needed to secure the cultural integrity and character of our peoples and to guarantee the economic support for each province by all the others. Justice must become our national objective rather than greed, the alleviation of pain and suffering our collective aim. Internationally Canada's role in combatting poverty and illness can only be enhanced by a restructured federalism based on cooperation rather than competition.

Idealistic? You bet! But not impossible. Besides, the stakes are higher than just the improvement and updating of Canada's political structure. There is for us Reformed people a special reason why we in particular must begin to think of Canada as a union of equal and culturally vibrant peoples. The changes that have taken place in Quebec recently have opened up truly astounding opportunities for evangelism here. Much exciting work has already been done, although our outreach is still in its initial stages. Yet if our witness of the risen Lord is to be at all credible and convincing to the French Canadian, it must issue from attitudes devoid of the old pre-conceived notions and prejudicial hangups. It must come from Reformed people who speak French, who are familiar with French Canada's history and who are sensitive to the needs of its people.

The problems and challenges faced by our Montreal congregation are, as was mentioned earlier, in several ways representative of the problems and challenges all of us as Reformed Christians in Canada are faced with today. As we in Montreal prepare to celebrate our twenty-fifth anniversary we face a future full of uncertainty on the one hand, but also full of challenge and exciting possibilities on the other. May the Lord grant that all of us across this great land may rise to the occasion.

PASTORAL COUNSELLING

Dag Hammarskjold, who used to be the secretary of the United Nations, makes the statement in his book that "the longest journey each one of us takes is the journey within." Learning to know ourselves is a lifelong process. It isn't something that you gain in just a few moments. It's not something that you gain when you go to a retreat or group session. It's a lifelong process. Each person who lives with a certain amount of depth in his soul is constantly trying to get to know himself, to take the journey within. Because of the complexity of human behavior. no one really fully understands himself. Only God can do this and that's why David prays, "Search me, O God, and know my heart." But anyone, if he really tries, can understand himself better. Since our attitudes and behavior reflect not only our own lives but also the lives of our parents and the background from which we come, we should know ourselves better because this is the first step towards self-improvement. We are physical, mental, moral and spiritual beings. Our bodies, our minds, our souls — these are the factors which make us what we are. So it is good for us to dig down and to find out just what is going on inside.

One of the reasons why many people do so little to change themselves is because they never take a good look at themselves. They are too busy criticizing others. They find fault with people around them, with the church, their family, but somehow or other they never seem to see their real faults. They never seem to find out exactly what is wrong with them and why they function so poorly. So, they strike out at others and they simply pass themselves by. They see the little speck in their brother's eye, but they don't see the beam in their own eye.

Thought for the week

The world needs more relaxed workers. There should be more men and women who have learned to work to their full capacity because they've also learned the art of relaxation. But to be truly relaxed, we should know that it is well with our soul. The person who can relax is the one who has learned to take a healthy attitude towards life and he has given heed to the call of Christ when He said, "Come unto me and I will give you rest."

One of the chief contributions of psychology and psychiatry has been this stress upon the inner man. It's the way of discovering our own behavior by looking within. It's the same thing that James talks about, a man seeing himself in a mirror, but then he so soon forgets what he looks like after he has taken a good look in the mirror. We ought to look inside and learn to know ourselves. Then it's not just simply a matter of pinning some kind of label on it - or saying. Yes, I'm a bit neurotic or I'm a bit paranoid or schizoid or something like this. That's not important, but it is important to reach the point where we can deal with the kind of person we really are in our inner selves.

There's something painful about this. That's why a lot of people don't like to be alone. Or, whenever they are alone they turn on their TV sets or stereo so that they don't have to do too much thinking. I met a man the other day who said, "My wife went off to be with our daughter who is having a baby and she's taking care of the family - there are some complications and I'm all alone here." The way he said it indicated that he didn't particularly like being alone. In fact, he found it very hard to understand that he had to be alone. He was talking constantly with the neighbors and other people, but he hated to go in the house and be alone. After all, when you're alone, when no one is talking with you or you aren't talking with somebody else, you are alone with your inner self and you come in contact with yourself as you really are. Knowing yourself is always the first step toward self-improvement.

There are some very strange groups that are conducting this sort of thing today. There's a group in California where the whole group is naked in a swimming pool - that's the way they conduct their meetings. The water is rather warm so that people are very much relaxed and the man who is in charge of this feels that this is a very effective way of dealing with people's problems. It has also been widely criticized. It has been used and misused in so many ways that it has led to more dangers and difficulties than it has been of help. Of course, there are always some people who feel they are helped by every kind of strange movement.

There is also the movement of transactional analysis, trying to talk this thing out and trying to develop their own language that they use. It has its values and it has certain things about it that are good, but on the other hand it also leads to certain strange reactions on the part of people. A number of people have found help in transcendental meditation. They spend some time with gurus or they get together with groups of people who are skilled in this field. They sit quietly in a rather strange knotted-up position and then just simply let the thoughts flow freely. They get ready for the day by spending some time in meditation. Meditation can be very effective. I doubt whether that's the kind of meditation that is intended because meditation could well mean for us that we get in touch with not only our own feelings but also with God and with His love and His power as revealed in Christ. There ought to be selfknowledge.

The goal is that we know ourselves so that we will work toward self-improvement. That's why I like the emphasis of David when he says, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts." Then he adds, "And lead me in the way everlasting." That's the thought! David prays that God may search out his heart so David may learn to know himself better and then find help in the presence of an eternal, loving, and compassionate God. Learn to know yourself. It's important! But then also help yourself to move towards greater heights.

THE ARTS

Glorifying the Lord through the arts 2

by Sally Smid

Mrs. Smid from Athens, Ont. is a member of the Committee on Current Canadian Affairs of the Canadian Federation of Christian Reformed Women.

We are not being true to the artist as a man if we consider his artwork "junk", simply because we differ with his outlook on life or world view. Some Christian schools, parents, and pastors have turned people off at just this point. Because the distinction was not made between technical excellence and content, the whole of much great art has been rejected by ridicule.

F.A. Schaeffer lists four basic standards in judging a work of art. Those suggested are: technical excellence, validity, intellectual content, and the integration of content and vehicle. In painting, one first considers the use of colour, form, balance, the texture of the paint, the handling of lines, the unity of the canvas and so forth. There may be varying degrees of technical excellence, an important aspect of a work of art, so that even if we don't agree with the artist's world view, he nonetheless be considered as a great artist.

Validity is the second criterion of art. By validity, Schaeffer means whether an artist is honest to himself and to his world view or whether he makes his art only for money or for the sake of being accepted. If an artist makes an artwork solely for a patron, his work does not necessarily have validity. It is easy to play to the critic and not to take one's art as a serious expression of what the artist himself wants to do.

The third criterion for the judgment of a work of art is its content, that which reflects the world view of the artist. As far as a Christian is concerned, the world view that is shown through a body of art must be seen ultimately in terms of the Scriptures. Paul writes in 1 Corinthians 3: In the end all men's works will be tried by fire and "if a man's works do not glorify God with Christ as the foundation, his work shall be destroyed." This, of course, must include the artwork of a Christian who does not create to the glory of God. A work of art will have no eternal value and it will be in vain if it is not to God's glory.

There is a corollary to this third criterion. If something is untrue or immoral and is stated by a great artist it can be far more destructive and devastating than if it is expressed in poor art. Therefore, the greater the artistic expression, the more important it is to consciously bring it and it's world view under the judgment of Christ and the Bible.

It would seem to me that Christians could learn quite a bit by studying such great artists' techniques, and discovering how such insights into God's aesthetic principles might be used by Christian artists to glorifying God and furthering his Kingdom.

There is a second consideration related to judging the content of an artwork; To say it is possible for a non-Christian painter's individual piece of work to be "in accordance with Christian world view" would seem a reduction of the artwork because it is out of the context of the artist's total heart commitment. If you were on a ship and saw an. approaching chunk of ice and someone tried to persuade you that it was "just a chunk of ice" and no more, when really it was attached to a giant iceberg underwater, would be similar to the person who tries to persuade you to agree that an artist's painting is "Christian" as you were viewing it, if you were unfamiliar with the artist's work or world view.

The fourth criterion involves how well the artist has suited the vehicle to the message. Picasso's Demoiselles d'Avignon is an exceptionally strong expression of the fractured nature of modern man. He deserves a high score for suiting the vehicle to the message. No art should be judged on the basis of this criterion alone, however. We should ultimately see all art works in the light of their technique, validity, world view, and suiting of form to content.

Artwork should never be rejected just because it is different from what has been done in the past. Styles of art form change and this should be expected. The Christian artist should express himself in relation to the life and times in which he creates. "If you are a young Christian artist, you should be working in the art forms of the 20th century, showing the marks of the culture out of which you have come, reflecting your own country and your own contemporaries and embodying something of the nature of the world seen from a Christian standpoint," Schaeffer comments. The theme of Christian art can include the abnormality of a revolting world. Men are lost apart from Christ and there is a defeated and sinful side to the Christian life. The major theme, however, should be that there is meaning and purpose to life because God is there and man is made in His image: there is optimism on the basis of Christ's work.

Total World

Christian art is by no means always "religious art." God's creation is not totally involved with religious subjects. And in the Bible, as previously noted, God commanded the artist, working within God's own creation, to fashion statues of things from nature. It is worth man's while to create artworks upon the basis of the great works God already created. This whole notion is rooted in the realization that Christianity is not just involved with "salvation" - angels, mangers, or crosses, but with the total man in the total world. Man, complete with his emotions, feelings, body, and life - this is an important subject matter for all artwork. What a Christian should portray in his art, then is the totality of life.

According to H.R. Rookmaaker in his book Modern Art and Death of a Culture, "What is Christian art, does not lie in the theme, but in the spirit of it, in its wisdom and the understanding of reality it reflects." Art's primary function is not to show the validity of Christianity; rather, the validity of art should be shown through Christianity.

As Christians, we should be seeking to understand the structures for art through Scripture, However these aren't explained in detail. "God did not give specific laws concerning the arts, nor for any other cultural element. These things belong to human possibilities. God created them and structured man in such a way that he could discover these possibilities, and gave man the freedom and the task to realize and fulfill them."

Art is never a copy of reality, but rather an interpretation of it - Of things seen, the relationships, the human reality experienced emotionally, rationally and in many other human ways. Truth in art means that the artist does justice to the different elements of reality.

All great art is the result of imagination, and God was the greatest imaginer of all.

To the Christian, another evidence of God as an imaginative, creative artist is the Bible itself. "No theme could be greater, no characterization more meaningful, no height or depth more profound, no insight more penetrating, no unity of structure in so diverse a framework more profound, no reality of presentation more genuine, yet truly an imaginative book," Kilby comments.

Therefore, Christian artists do not need to be threatened by imagination, fantasy or the abstract, for they have a basis for knowing the difference between them and the real world. The Christian is the really free man. He is free to have imagination which should "fly beyond the stars".

It is my hope and prayer that these articles dealing with aesthetics, will prove a blessing in inciting us as Christians, as we strive together to live our whole lives to the glory of God, to claim the arts.

too, in all of their dimensions, for the furtherance of God's Kingdom. We are called to bring every thought captive to Christ - every element of our artistic expression under his Lordship. The choices we make in the clothes we wear, the way we decorate our homes, the new car we purchase are all aesthetic choices.

Most importantly, no work of art is more important than the Christian's own life, and every Christian is called upon to be an artist in this sense. He may have no gift of writing, no gift of composing or singing, but each man has the gift of creativity in terms of the way he lives his life. "In this sense, the Christian's life is to be an art work. The Christian's life is to be a thing of truth and also a thing of beauty."

Politics

"We stand on guard for thee?"

by Ben Vandezande

Actually, it's quite a simple procedure. Over a span of three to four months you fill out a few forms, answer some questions, repeat an oath and you're in — a new Canadian citizen.

Oh, there are some attempts to make the situation a bit impressive with a Mounty's uniform and the judges' big black robes, but for the most part, most of us go home to live in pretty much the same way as we did before we became citizens.

Patriotism, a person's active love for his country by acting as a responsible citizen, is not a very common thing. For example, if we were to measure our patriotism by our active political awareness and action we would have to say that we aren't lovers of Canada.

Reformed Christians a frightenning ignorance of political fife. We don't really know what is going on, what the issues of the day are or how we as christians should respond. And for the most part, we are not ignorant because such knowledge is beyond our reach but because we are not interested enough to reach out for it.

And yet it never ceases to amaze me how well we have done in other ways. People who might use the excuses of a lack of education, problems with the language or lack of time seem to be able to understand and have time for very complex matters in business or in their trade.

One often hears the complaint that big business and labour unions have taken over the power of decision-making anyways. Such groups are blamed for robbing us of our citizenship and our ability to influence decisions. The problem with such a cop-out is that someone had to move over, someone had to make room so that such powers could replace the citizens and their influence.

In the January 1, 1979 issue of MacLean's, Peter Newman indicated that 1979 would be an important political year. Many provinces would be holding elections and of course Canada as a whole will be called to the polls this spring. How will we vote? What will we think and say about the issues raised?

At a deeper level, the next decade is a crucial one for Canada (and the U.S.) for more profound reasons than an election. Elections may be little more than a changing of the guard if there are not any new christian directions ofterred politically. Therein lies our calling.

Canadians in general are not known for being blind patriots. You don't hear the idea pushed very often (as it is in the U.S.) that we have the best country in the world, that we are number 1 and that the hope of the world lies with us. That is both our potential strength and weakness: Our strength, because we don't have a blind faith that our way is the way. That leaves room for repentance and change. That leaves an openness to alternatives; and our weakness, because we can become cynical. "Can any good come from Canada? Can we expect government to do justice at all?"

Let's go back to our day when we became citizens. Many of us tend to look at a government and a country as our benefactor. When things go well, when the government gives us what we want, we are thankful and talk about what a good country this is and how we appreciate living in a country which does so much good for us.

But, when things don't go so well, we curse the benefactor. In fact we curse blindly and we blame all of our ills on the government no matter what the government does.

When we became citizens we did that so that we, too, could contribute to it. John F. Kennedy was only halfright when he said, "Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country." He was right in stressing that the heart of citizenship is in giving yourself to your country and helping it be a land of justice and liberty. A citizen is entitled to be treated justly. By virtue of his God-given citizenship the government is obligated to be just to him even if he does nothing.

Paul points to that in Romans 13. Certainly, the emperor in Paul's time and the Roman Empire generally was by no means a Godhonouring just state. But, says Paul, all authorities are ordained by God. They have been given their place as servant by God in order to "execute wrath on the wrongdoer." Paul wants the Roman christians (and us) to see that their task is to work out their calling as citizens even if that country or government is demonic.

Our exercising of our citizenship does not come out of our love for our country in the first place, it comes out of our love for God. Only then can we return justice for injustice, good for evil and, in fact, overcome evil with good. That is positive patriotism.

We can't leave a christian political witness to groups like the Committee for Justice and Liberty or the CRC committee for contact with the Government. We may not give up our political task so easily. No one is excluded from active citizenship. Thank God for that!

Want to run for alderman?

What do you think of the idea of running for the office of alderman in your area? Does that strike you as a positive political thing to do? Increasingly this is becoming a more popular avenue in Reformed circles. I have received letters from Essex, Bowmanville and Jarvis describing how people have been elected to office there or at least ran for office.

There is something very good about that. Municipal politics is at least free from political party connections that make politics at a provincial or federal level more complicated. You are your 'own person' at the municipal level and that 'directness' of decision-making is good.

We should not pretend however, that we are at the nerve-centre of power in the position of alderman. There are limited powers left to municipal government.

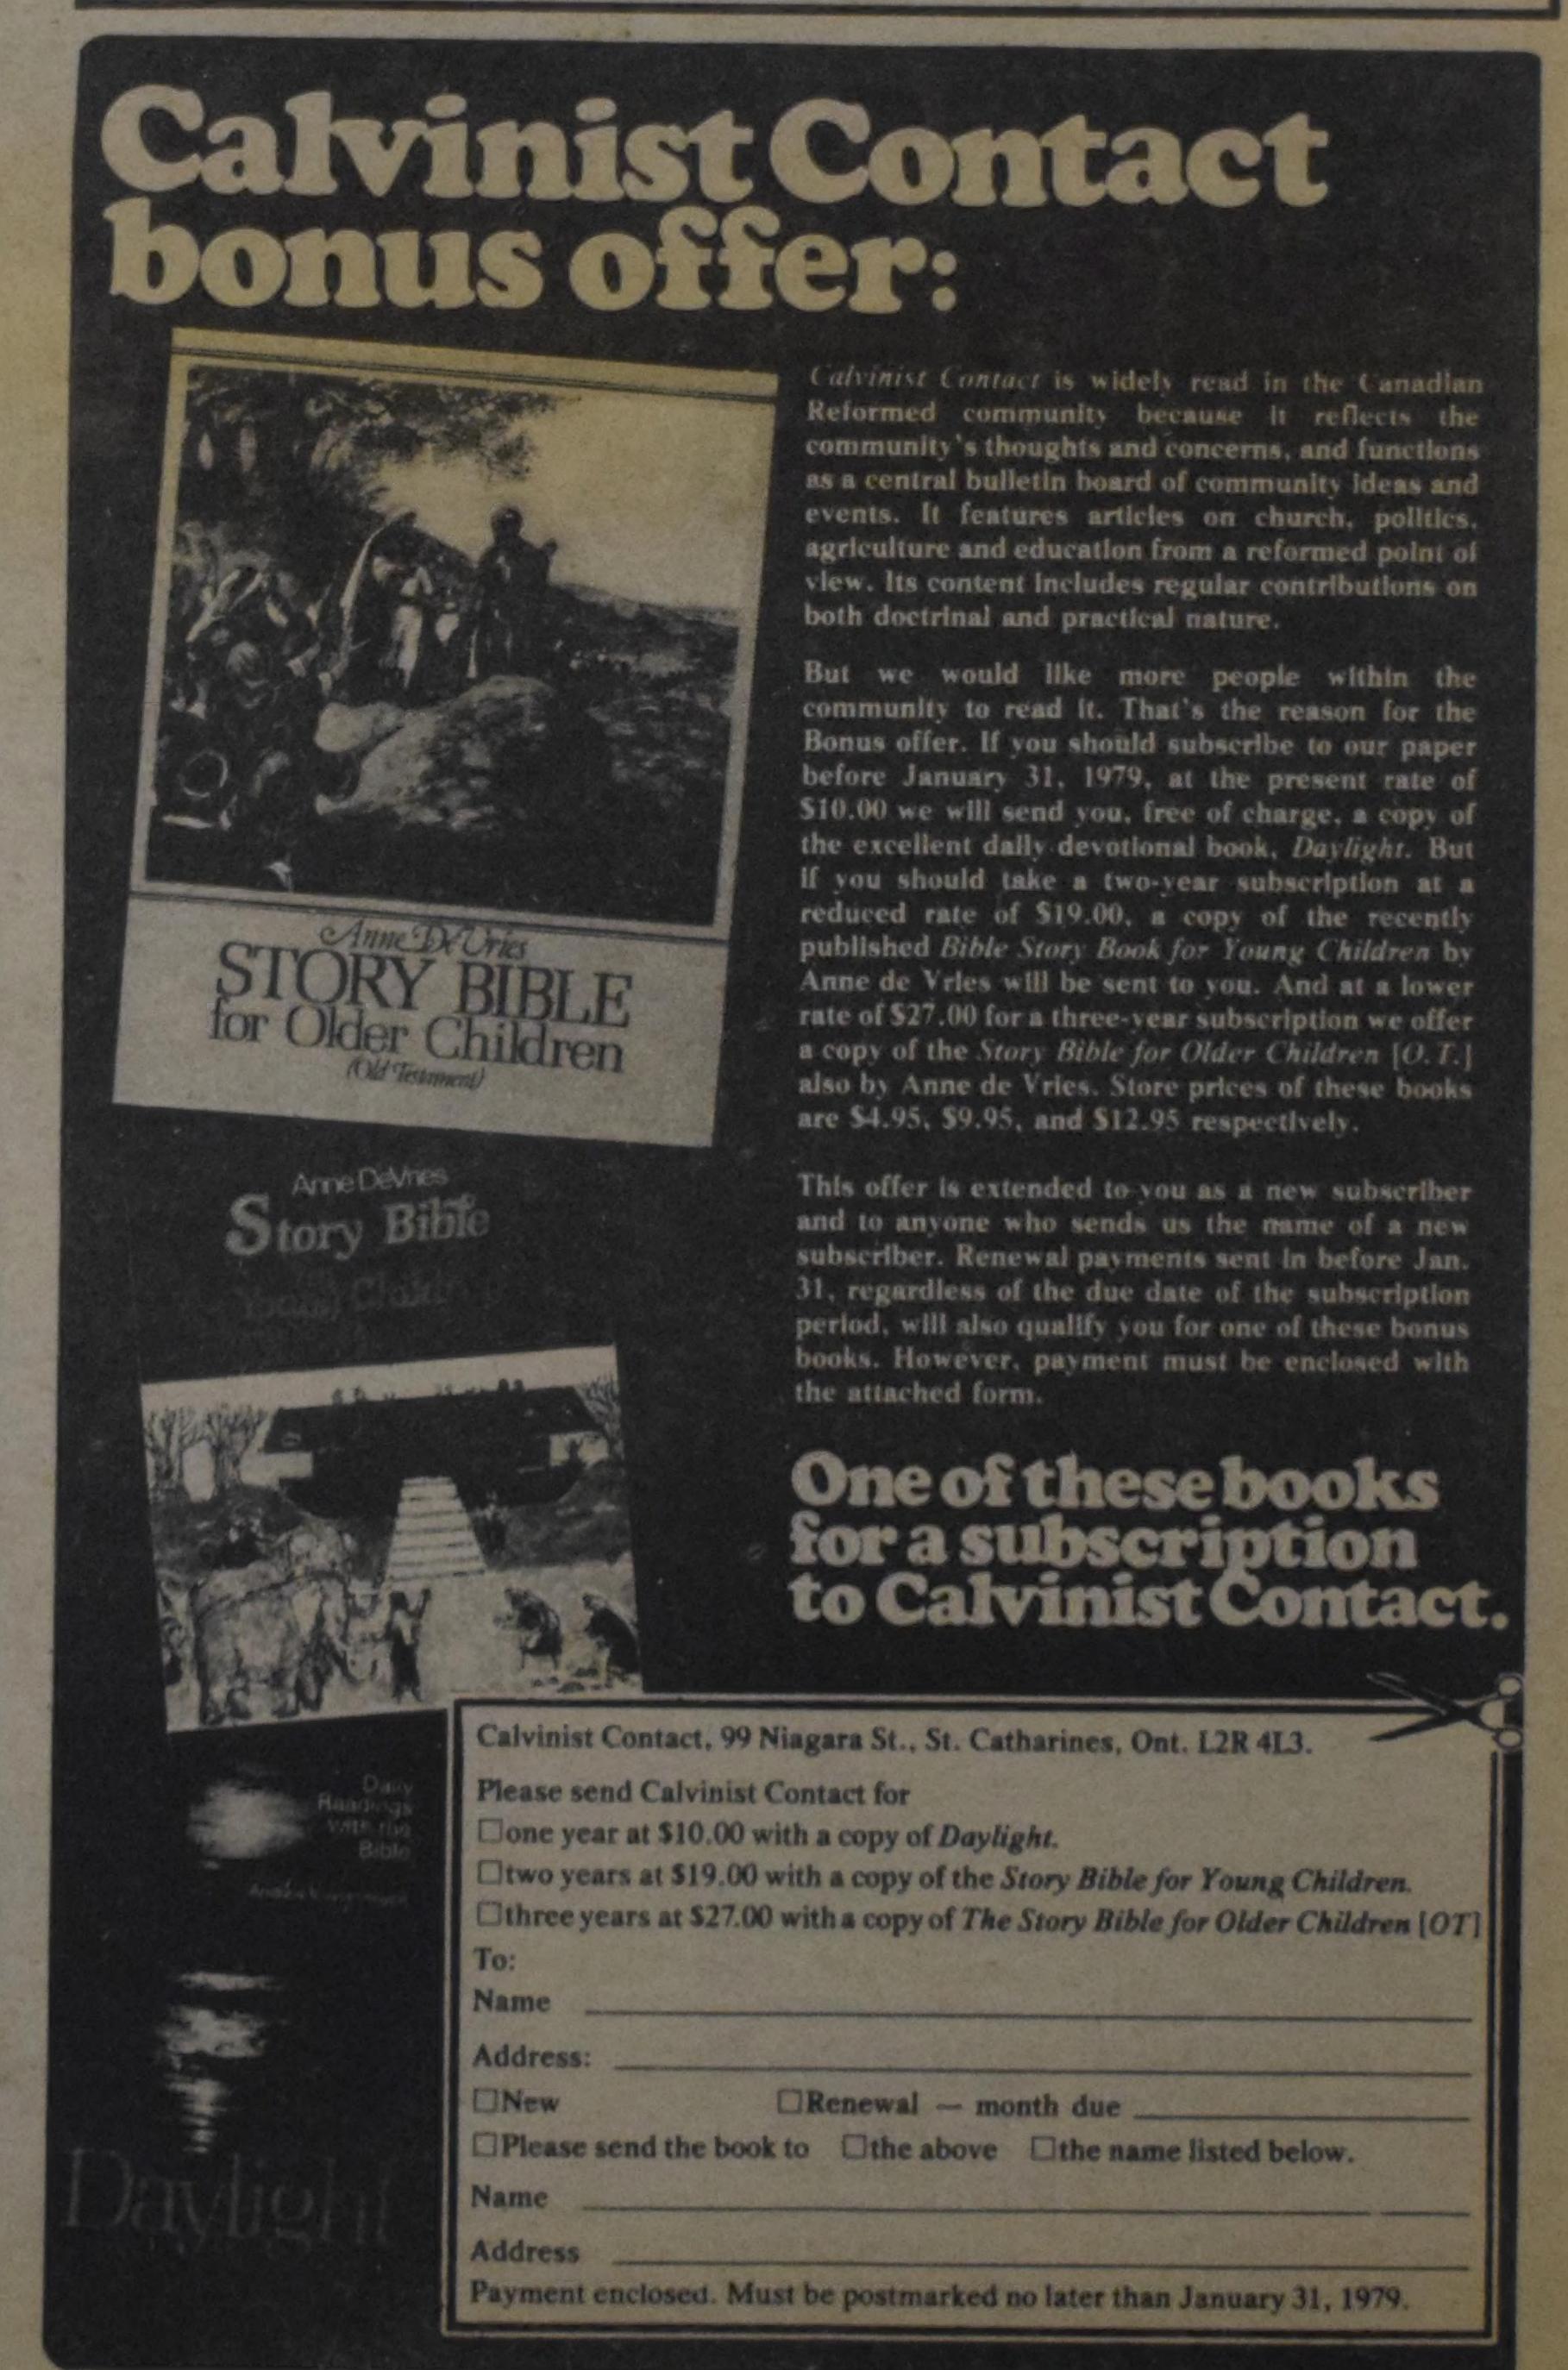

The difficulty often experienced by those who are aldermen can be in keeping up with the topics under discussion. Most aldermen I know have little or no awareness of the Issues they are dealing with apart from a report they may have read. It seems to me, that aldermen need a) more time to do their job well and especially to get an overall picture, and b) a group of people he can draw on for advice or opinion on specific issues. Without those, we may be present as aldermen but our distinctive christian contribution is difficult to make. We cannot assume that being a christian in political office will automatically lead to christian politics. That takes work and time and people. It is one thing to be a caretaker sort of alderman who simply supervises the work. It takes more work to research and provide alternatives.

Yet, strangely enough, we often shy away from personally working with or struggling through issues with fellow christians in politics (or with non-christians).

on municipal politics I would suggest we do at least 3 things: 1) Form a group of people who are willing to meet regularly, starting now, as to what a christian position would be on the issues being raised. To do that we should become very familiar with the topics under discussion and positions being taken. 2) We will have to develop a way of campaigning that is going to make clear some of the directions we would like to see take place. 3) Meet regularly with political officials now and discuss the issues with them for practice.

These are some thoughts. We can't wait with acting on them until a month before the next election. Prepare now for a responsible witness later! (And let us know how you are making out).

Godsdienstige opschriften

'k Heb nog nooit zoveel opschriften, ook godsdienstige, op auto's gelezen als in Florida. En ook zoveel eigenaardige. Je kunt ze ook onderverdelen. Er zijn opschriften die u iets vertellen over de persoon die de auto bestuurt. Het kan een opschrift zijn dat u wil waarschuwen geen botsing met hem te veroorzaken, hij moet echt bang zijn voor een aanrijding. Of hij wil u waarschuwen ernst te maken met de toekomst, van uw land, of van uw ziel. Hij wil een getuige zijn van Christus en degene die achter hem rijdt wijzen op de Heer. Een goede boodschap dus, maar soms gebracht op een letwat banale manier.

Er zijn ook opschriften van algemene aard. B.v. Ik wil u graag lets vertellen over mijn kleinkinderen. En ... ik laat er nu maar verschillende onvertaald, ze verliezen lets als je ze vertaalt. Did you hug your kids today? America, love it or leave it. I brake for animals. Pas op, geen botsing, alstublieft!

Op verschillende auto's kunt u lezen dat de eigenaar of de chauffeur van die auto een gelovige is. Hij vertelt het eerlijk: I found it. Born twice, die once. I am Redeemed with the blood of Jesus. I have decided to follow Jesus. Hallelujah, Jesus is my Lord. I am a king's kid. I never lost it. It is not a secret I love Jesus.

Op andere auto's geeft de eigenaar u allerlei informatie over God, Jesus, etc. en raadt u aan wat u moet doen. Soms in een vreemde bewoording: Jesus is guilty of love in the first degree. Your passport to heaven is Jesus. Turn on to Jesus, He is coming soon. Things be better with Christ. You are in good hands with Jesus. Korte opmerkingen: the King is coming; every knee shall bow; just a miracle away; Smile, God loves you; Jesus is the way; Praise the Lord; Immanuel, God with us.

Heel wat eigenaars putten zich uit om door de achterkant van hun auto met heel wat opschriften degenen die achter hen rijden te wijzen op de Heer Jezus. Ze zeggen dan b.v. Zorg er toch voor dat uw laatste vrienden engelen zijn! Lees de Bijbel, en bid elke dag! God heeft tijd om naar u te luisteren als u de tijd neemt om tot Hem te bidden! Faith or fear, make your choice! Exit, heaven or hell!

Ze willen dat u een goede kijk hebt op de gelovigen, en zeggen: Christenen zijn niet volmaakt, maar hun zonden zijn vergeven. Wie hen aanraakt, raakt de appel van Gods oog aan (Zach. 2:12). Ze verwachten de Heer Jezus op de wolken des hemels, en geloven in "the rapture" zij baseren die gebeurtenis op een verkeerde exegese van 1 Thess. 4:17, en geven via hun "stickers" een waarschuwing aan ledere autobestuurder die achter hen rijdt. Notice: when the rapture comes, I depart from the earth, or Warning: in case of rapture, this car will be unmanned. Erg vreemd, alsof bij de wederkomst van de Heer Jezus er zomaar een auto blijft doorrijden en je maar moet oppassen niet in botsing te komen met die auto, die nu zonder bestuurder wie weet wat voor vreemde capriolen maakt.

Nog vreemder wordt de gedachte als je denkt aan een gelovige piloot van een vliegtuig, die plotseling bij de komst van Christus het vliegtuig verlaat, de Heer tegemoet gaat, en dan het vliegtuig maar laat doorvliegen, totdat het ergens neerstort, of kan het nog veilig landen met een automatische piloot?

Terwijl er juist staat in 1 Thess. 4 dat de Heer zal komen met een luid bevel, met een roep van een aartsengel, en met het geluid van een trompet, en dan zullen ook nog alle doden eerst opstaan. Nu dan hebben we de waarschuwing achter op die auto niet nodig. Hij zal zelf ook wel gauw aan de kant gaan staan als dat gebeurt, en die piloot zal wel gauw het naastbijzinde vliegveld opzoeken.

En als we geloven in de Heiland zullen we Hem met de gelovigen die opgestaan zijn tegemoet gaan in de lucht en we zullen aitijd bij de Heer zijn, ook als Hij op deze aarde komt om te oordelen de levenden en de doden. Want daarvoor kwam Hij terug. De evangelieën wijzen ons ook slechts op een terugkomst van de Heer Jezus. Mooie opschriften, vreemde opschriften, kinderlijke upschriften en verkeerde opschriften. Het is een mengelmoes van "stickers" on the back of many cars. Waarvan acte!

Watersnoodramp

Een Kandidaat zou op 1 februari 1953 in NIEUWER-KERK op beroep preken. (overgenomen uit de Friese Koerier van 9 februari 1963).

Voor zondag 1 februari 1953 had ik een preekverzoek uit Nieuwerkerk (Zeeland). Als kandidaat was je blij met elk preekverzoek, dat er binnen kwam. Het deed er niet toe, in wat voor uithoek van Nederland. Je vond het zelfs leuk, omdat je zo nog eens ergens in Nederland kwam. Je was nu losgelaten op de kerken, je had de beschermende studentenwereld verlaten en "het" was begonnen, waar je studie op uitliep.

Nieuwerkerk kende ik niet. Op de kaart had ik gezien, dat het op Schouwen-Duiveland lag."

In de Classicale kerkbode van de gereformeerde kerken in de classis Zutphen vertelt ds. W.A. Jelsma, nu gereformeerd predikant te Lochem, hoe hij op 1 februari 1953 in Nieuwerkerk op Schouwen op beroep zou preken. Onder het motto, ontleend aan de 69ste psalm "Verlos mij o God, want het water is gekomen tot aan de lippen", schrijft hij verder:

't Was een dorpje, dat me niets zei, maar dat sinds 1

1953 voor altijd februari gegrift zou staan in mijn geheugen. En zo ook de namen als Vierbannenpolder en Rampaartsedijk. Met de laatste pont, die voorlopig 't Mastgat overstak, ben ik op die stormachtige zaterdagavond in Zijpe aangekomen op het eiland, dat in zoveel leed gedompeld zou worden, het eiland, dat in de eerste kranten na de ramp vermeld zou worden als het gebied, "waar doodse verlatenheid heerste", en als 't land, ''dat vrijwel geheel verdwenen was".

Mijn gastheer, de timmerman-aannemer L. Tieleman, haalde mij af van 't tramstationnetje in Nieuwerkerk en met ons beiden vochten we tegen de Noordwester in, om thuis te komen. Hoe de naam van de straat, waar hij woonde was, heb ik nooit geweten en ik weet het nog niet, want de volgende dag was deze straat er niet meer. Hij woonde even buiten de kom van het dorp in een nieuwbouwwoning, een uit een rij van drie onder een kap, zoals zo vele woningen na de oorlog in het uibreidingsplan waren. Je was benieuwd bij welke mensen je nu kwam en welke ervaringen je nu zou opdoen. Ik kwam in een gezin van 4 personen; vader, moeder en 2 kinderen, een meisje en een jongen van respectievelijk plm. 11 en 9 jaar. De volgende dag was er nog een oude baas bij, een goede zeventiger, de vader van mijn gastheer, die niet meer in de gelegenheid was, om terug te keren naar zijn huisje in de kom van het dorp, waar hij samen met zijn vrouw een gelukkige levensavond genoot.

Zondagmorgen

Zondagmorgen, ver voor kerktijd, overviel het water het landdorpje Nieuwerkerk. Eerst hebben we nog door het ijskoude water gebaggerd, om gordijnen op te knopen en om huisraad naar boven te sjouwen, onnozelen die we waren. We hadden beter onmiddellijk naar de kom van het dorp kunnen vluchten, dat op een verhoging lag, maar wie had de gedachte aan zo'n vloedgolf? Een inundatie hadden ze vaker meegemaakt en dan kwam het water niet zo hoog. Maar 't water steeg zo snel, dat we one boven moesten installeren op een van de kamers van de kinderen. Wat we toen de eerste uren vanuit het raam zagen. was verschrikkelijk. We zagen huizen als kaartenhuisjes instorten. We zagen mensen Vervolg op pag. 10

•Er was weer een publiek opinie onderzoek aangaande voorkeur voor politieke partijen in Canada. De 10% voorsprong van de Progressive Conservative Partij viel tot 2%, de Liberalen stegen 3% tot 38%, en de N.D.P. bleef konstant met 18%.

*Het koude weer in Iran heeft de ongeregeldheden wat doen bekoelen, alhoewel er nog wel natuurlijk hete hoofden waren. Er wordt alweer een nieuwe kabinet-krisis verwacht door het aftreden van een van de ministers. De olie vloeit weer in dat land, het zwarte goud verlaat weer de bronnen, maar het andere goud vloeit ook rijkelijk. De kranten berichten een toenemende kapitaalsvlucht uit Iran. De Shah heeft beloofd om eens flink in zijn spaarpotje te kijken en millioenen dollars vrij te maken voor verdeling onder zijn onderdanen. Een kat in nood....

•En om nog even over olie door te gaan. In Amerika werden acht van de voornaamste olie firma's voor de rechtbank gedaagd door de regering wegens onwettig hoge winsten in de afgelopen vijf jaar. De regering beschuldigde de firma's van 624 millioen dollars onwettige winst.

•En in Jamaica's hoofdstad Kingston was er oproer over verhoging van olie prijzen.

De Senator voor South Dakota in Amerika heeft zich uitgelaten over de wenselijkheid van een internationaal graan-kartel. Amerika, Canada, Australie en Argentinie zouden de deelnemers moeten zijn. "De Arabieren doen het met hun olie", zo suggereerde McGovern," dus waarom wij niet". Er zit natuurlijk wel wat in. 't Klinkt ook nogal "oog-om-oog achtig", maar per slot van rekening zijn het vooral ook de boeren die met hoge olie kosten te kampen hebben.

De communistische broederschap is weer eens een sprookje gebleken. Vietnam troepen hebben nu Cambodja volledig veroverd. Van je familie moet je 't maar hebben.

*Rev. Stan Mooneyham, voorzitter van World Vision International, beschuldigde de westerse landen van rassenhaat in verband met de Vietnam vluchtelingen affaire. Hij zei dat er wei meer en betere maatregelen getroffen zouden worden als het maar ging om 250,000 blanke Europeanen. Deze dominee heeft het wel bij 't rechte eind. We mogen dankbaar zijn dat ons land aan vijfduizend vluchtelingen een haven aanbood.

•Voor allen die met jaloersheid aan hun vrienden en bekenden in Florida denken: de temperatuur was daar maar net 10 graden Celsius in de afgelopen week. Ze hebben gerild.

Vervolg van pag. 9 in doodsnood van de daken springen.

We zagen een moeder met een kind, die zich aan een tuinbank hadden vastgeklampt, in de golven verdwijnen. Machteloos zagen we 't leed van andere mensen aan, we waren volkomen omsingeld door het woedende water. We zagen het dak van een enorme schuur, dat omhoog getild door het hooi en losgescheurd van 't huis, op ons afkwam, niet als de reddende ark van Noach, maar als een van de middeleeuwse stormrammen, om onze vesting te beuken. Goddank maakte dit vaartuig - het bleek later het dak van boerderij 'Zeemanslust' te zijn vlak voor het huis een zwenking naar links en strandde voor de Geref. kerk.

Zondagmiddag

We hebben geprobeerd, in de middag een hap door onze keel te krijgen, maar we hadden geen honger, alleen maar dorst. Mijn gastheer sprak het Onze Vader uit. maar bleef halverwege steken. Meer dan wij besefte hij, hoe groot het gevaar was, waarin wij verkeerden. Hij had zelf vele woningen gemaakt en toen hij zag, dat hele straten schoongeveegd werden, wist hij, dat ook zijn huis niet bestand zou zijn tegen deze elementen. De voorkant van 't huis was al weggeslagen en voor hem was het een kwestie van tijd. We hebben met elkaar Rom. 8 gelezen, een gedeelte, dat ik m'n leven lang niet meer vergeten zal. Boven de stem van vele wateren hoorden wij de stem van God. En rustig temidden van de woelige baren stond niet zo ver van ons als een teken, de ronde witte molen. Tenslotte werden we uit de bovenverdieping verdreven.

Vanuit het luik zagen we. hoe't water beukte tegen de binnenmuren en hoe de scheuren trokken in 't wit. 't Werd benauwend rond het luik. We moesten een uitweg naar boven hebben; je werd gek van het naar beneden turen in de golven. Er was geen dakvenster; we moesten er een maken. Met een oud ledikant hebben we 't dak met man en macht opengerammeid. Als het huis instortte, dan hadden we 't dak misschien nog als vlot.

Zo kwamen we op 't dak. 't Was toen al weer avond geworden — de eerste dag van 't onheil.

Nu pas waren we in staat, om naar onze buren te gaan, twee oudjes, een gepensioneerd hoofdonderwijzer, die blind was en zijn zuster. Tieleman Jr. en Sr. maakten opnieuw een gat in het dak en daarna in de vliering en daar konden ze een laatste glimp opvangen van deze oude mensen, die in doodsnood elkaar omklemd hadden en die een moment later onbarmhartig door de golven werden neergeslagen. De reddende handen kwamen net te laat! Men heeft de lijken op twee heel verschillende plaatsen terug gevonden.

Tot middernacht steeg het water. Het was gekomen tot vlak onder de dakgoot. Om ons heen was het nu pikke donker. Een enkele maal hebben we 't geronk van een vliegtuig gehoord. Ergens in de verte pinkelden enkele lichtjes. Wat licht in het donker betekent, heb ik toen woor 't eerst goed beseft. Maandagmorgen vroeg kwamen de buren van 't andere hoekhuis via de dakgoot bij ons binnen. De toestand was daar onhoudbaar geworden. In totaal waren we nu met 4 gezinnen, waaronder twee babies. 's Nachts was aan hun kant nog een vrouw aangespoeld. Op een stuk hout was zij komen aandrijven. Ze had haar zoontje aan de golven moeten prijs geven. Haar spieren waren verlamd door het water.

Maandagmiddag werden we uit onze benarde positie bevrijd. Een jongen in een kano, 't enige vaartuig in het dorp, had een verbinding tot stand gebracht met ''de vaste wal''. Een vlot, in de haast in elkaar getimmerd, haalden we via een kabel naar ons toe. Met de stroom mee kwamen we aan wal. Over kadavers, pakken stro en huisraad waren we beland in de kom van het dorp.

Een van de woningen was opvangcentrum voor drenkelingen geworden. Pas toen konden ook wij aan de slag en meehelpen.

In een winkel kocht ik een paar klompen, want ik was barrevoets. Nog steeds staan deze klompen als stille getuigen in de garage en vaak als ik in de tuin bezig ben, denk ik terug aan de gemartelde grond van Zeeland.

De taferelen in het dorp waren vreselijk. Een onbeschrijfelijke chaos heerste er.

"Heb je al iets gehoord van m'n man, van m'n vrouw, van m'n kinderen?"

Niets.

Er waren ook blijde ontmoetingen, mensen, die elkaar terugvonden.

Nood leert bidden. Nood leert ook vloeken. En is het niet te begrijpen? 't is gemakkelijk te geloven dat God een verre, vreemde God is, die nauwelijks weet, waar Zeeland ligt met zijn machteloze dijken, zijn kinderen en zijn vee. Maar de God van Jona spaarde Nineve, "waarin meer dan 120.000 mensen zijn, die het onderscheid niet Vervolg op pag. 11

Heinemieke stapt echter naar de machtige heer toe, steekt haar hand uit en dan durft Arjen ook. In de meester is een glimlach, het zijn nog zulke hartverwarmende kinderen.

De meester begroet de schoolopziener met ongeveinsde blijdschap; de heer Van der Ven is niet bijster voor het christelijk onderwijs, maar hij voelt zich tot deze zonderlinge meester in deze barre omstandigheden aangetrokken en komt elk jaar op bezoek. In het bestuurskamertje legt de meester de diepe nood van de laatste tijd uit. De schoolopziener luistert nog meer vertaasd dan vorige jaren. "U wilt toch niet beweren, dat u dit werk alleen verricht?"

"Dat beweer ik."

"En enkele kinderen heloen?"

"Inderdaad. Het gaat prima."

"Kinderen moeten spelen," oordeelt de heer Van der Ven, "ze zijn te jong om nu reeds op school een taak te vervullen. Dit kan een tijd goed gaan, maar het wordt onhoudbaar."

"De toestand is reeds lang onhoudbaar," zegt de meester kalm, "maar we doen wat mogelijk is."

De schoolopziener trommelt met zijn dikke vingers on de tafel. "Ik moet u zeggen, dat de kinderen niet de indruk maken in het onderwijs verwaarloosd te worden," zegt hij met nadruk, "die lof geef ik u: ik maak u mijn compliment, mijnheer Vermeulen."

De meester buigt even zwijgend.

'En nu?'' vraagt hij dan.

De heer Van der Ven staat op, reikt de hand ten afscheid. "Ik beloof u. dat ik alles zal doen hier verandering in te brengen."

''Zijn er mogelijkheden?'' vraagt de meester

"Ik weet het niet." De heer Van der Ven zucht even, ziet door de kleine ramen naar buiten, waar het duinzand tegen de kozijnen waait; "ik zal de financiele nood bespreken, maar u weet dat christelijk onderwijs naar de mening van de Regering tot de overbodige zaken behoort - men kan doen wat men wil, maar subsidie verstrekken? Ik hoopte het -- "Hij keert zich naar de meester: "Ik hoopte het altijd, maar tot nu toe is alles vergeefs geweest."

De meester ziet de schoolopziener na. Dan schudt hij het hoofd. De heer Van der Ven kan het mogelijke doen, maar ook hij is ondergeschikt aan wetten en bepalingen.

in de gang botst de meester bijna tegen Jo en Frits op; beiden zuigen op iet lekkers, dat hun ene wang dik maakt.

"Zo schoolmeesters," zegt de meester tegen hen," is dat les geven?" Frits steekt zijn tong zover mogelijk uit, waar een bruin balletje glinsterend aan kleeft; Jo doet hetzelfde.

"Van moeder gekregen," zegt

Frits, "reuze lekker-" Dan schieten beiden de klas in omdat hij er niets voor voelt zijn vader te vertellen, dat het balletje uit het bekende trommeltje van z'n moeder is gekomen en hij het kreeg om moed te krijgen voor het bezoek van de schoolopziener. Achteraf is het immers laf, weg te rennen voor zo'n dure mijnheer. "Eigenlijk vond ik het reuze, dat die mijnheer helemaal naar ons toekomt," zegt Fritz en Jo stemt er heftig mee in.

Er verandert niets in de komende maanden en het tobben gaat door, maar er is toch enige voldoening, dat de school blijft bestaan en de kinderen komen in een tamelijke regelmaat. Ook nu is het schoolgaan in de winter minder dan in de zomer, maar het grote verzuim van het eerste begin komt niet meer voor.

Soms ziet de meester kans in de lesuren, als de kinderen aan hun lessen werken, iets te doen aan zijn preek voor de komende Zondag. Als hij geen tijd heeft, spreekt hij uit het hoofd, de Bijbelteksten zijn hem vertrouwd en het vertellen gaat hem gemakkelijk af, maar tegelijk weet hij dat een spreker moet studeren, wil hij inhoud aan zijn rede hem, maar dit neemt niet weg, dat hij immers wel, wat ze doen. elke Zondag een paar uur van huis is, omdat hij het Zondagsschooluur moet bijwonen.

Onverminderd houdt de gewoonte stand, de meester te roepen bij ziekte en sterven. Als de meester maar komt, dan kan men alles verdragen en voelt men zich beschermd - de meester - de meester - Als de meester zijn hand op de van koorts gloeiende kindergezichtjes legt, zijn vele ouders gerust; als de meester bij het sterven van hun kind de Bijbel neemt en hen voorleest van Jezus die de grootste kindervriend aller eeuwen is, zijn ze stil.

Begrafenissen moet de meester leiden en bruiloften van begin tot eind bijwonen, maar dit is te veel gevergd; dit blijft bij gelukwensen. Begrafenissen woont hij vanzelfsprekend geheel bij.

Moeilijk blijft de tegenstand, de spot, de bedekte hoon over de preekmeester. De grappen die de beschaafde mens maakt over de meester, mikpunt van de mens, die zichzelf meer acht dan de kale schoolmeester, die met Heienaars omgaat.

Ook dit onthoudt God, er zal eens verantwoording gevraagd worden aan spotter die kinderen van God hebben durven honen en bespotten. Ze weten

De meester gaat rustig zijn gang: het deert hem weinig wat men van hem zegt.

Het is een koude, donkere avond als er gebeld wordt. Voor de deur staat Mooie Nel, maar er is nu niets moois aan haar te vinden. Ze heeft een gelapte rok aan en een jumper, die alle kleuren van de regenboog heeft; om haar hoofd heeft ze een gerafelde doek gewonden en alles in haar gezicht verraad en geweldige agitatie.

"Meester, nou is me man derin gevloge, nou is Malle Eiple erbij en of u effe ken komme."

"Wat is er aan de hand?"

Ze staat al bij het hekje. "Kom asjeblieft meester, u weet wel: Malle Eipie is me man en nou gaatie achter de tralies en dan heb ik geen inkomme

De meester heeft zijn hoed al van de kapstok genomen; even later loopt hij met een zenuwachtige Nel over het modderige pad naar de keet van Eipie, waar een petroleumlamp een vettige walm verspreidt. Voorbij de keet staat een arrestantenwagen, maar niemand heeft belangstelling: leder blijft staan of is binnengebleven in eigen keet.

Is het een wonder, dat mensen zeggen, dat ze deze God niet verklezen te dienen?

Dinsdag evacuatie

Dinsdag was de lucht vol van vliegtuigen en helicopters, de werkpaarden van het luchtruim. Op deze dag begon de evacuatie van zieken en ouden, van vrouwen en kinderen. Af en aan kwamen de vissers van lerseke over het gevaarlijke water, dat onder zich zoveel verraderlijke obstakels verborg. Woensdagmorgen werden de laatste groepen opgehaald.

We voeren het dijkgat uit, dat meer op een zeegat leek. Zover we zien konden, was water, en vreemd en onwezenlijk stonden bomen en ruines van boerenhoeven in 't water. We kwamen aan in Ierseke en van daar uit werden de mensen verdeeld over de verschillende plaatsen.

Toen ben ik m'n eigen weg gegaan en heb afscheid genomen van de familie, die hun gastvrijheid zo moeilijk konden betonen, maar bij wie ik geen grotere gastvrijheid heb kunnen genieten.

Geen van de mensen, bij wie ik te gast geweest ben. tijdens mijn tournee door Nederland, zijn me zo na geworden als Leen en Annie. Rita en Piet. Via een veerdienst kwam ik tot vlak onder Bergen op Zoom. Ik moest nog een half uur over slib lopen de haven was n.l. dicht geslibd - om nog de trein naar Amsterdam te kunnen nemen.

Besmeurd door 't slib, op klompen, en dood op, kwam ik thuis.

De kandidaat had niet It Woord gebracht. Een Ander heeft het voor hem gedaan.

Later hoorde ik, dat Nieuwerkerk het zwaarst van alle dorpen op Schouwen-Duivenland getroffen was. In een gedenkboek over de ramp van Schouwen-Duiveland, dat ik van mijn gastheer kreeg, stond onder Nieuwerkerk -"door het dal der schaduwen des doods". Nieuwerkerk was het Duinkerken van Duiveland.

Vijf jaar later werd de inieuwe Geref, kerk in Nieuwerkerk in gebruik genomen: 'Als je de kerk binnenkomt, valt je oog op een gedenkbord, waar op geschreven staat: "alleen neem er u voor in acht en hoed er u terdege voor dat gij de dingen die gij met eigen ogen gezien hebt niet vergeet". Deut 4:95 "Ter nagedachtenis aan de 55 leden onzer gemeente die bij de watersnood 1-2-1953 zijn omgekomen''.

I congratulate everyone who is on the ladder this month for still sending solutions even though there were only two problems to solve and the deadline was in the busiest time of the year for some of you. Hopefully, the next ladder will be twice the size! Every solution which was set in was correct, so I have no "tries" to report. Here are the solutions:

Education groups come together for discussion

by John W. Bakker

Mr. Bakker is president of District 10 [OACS] and secretary of Christian Schools International as well as a member of the Canadian Curriculum Council.

The Canadian Curriculum Council of Christian Schools International met recently for a two-day work-session. The Christian school in Burlington, Ont. very appropriately formed the stage for this endeavour in "christian education".

Open discussions were held representatives with OCSAA, OCTA, CDC, CCEF, with OACS Interim Executive Director, with CSI district consultants. Much positive advice and input was received; all united in the desire to serve the christian school commun-Ity.

The discussions of the Council were directed along the development of the four areas: long range planning, project development, coordination, diffusion. Considerable time was spent on long range planning. Three points drew attention: the confessional level, world-and-life view, curriculum framework. Article 2 of the CSI bylaws gives a clear confessional frame. Contemporary expression of a Reformed Christian worldand-life view is an ongoing process. Methodology and emphasis may differ in curriculum development and the Council decided proposals must include a statement of "basic framework".

The first field of activity was chosen to be the whole K-12 social studies, history and geography curriculum. Specific Canadian elements are involved in these subjects.

CSI projects already in development, Man in Society and Canadian Social Studies series were endorsed for further finalizing.

Coordination and Diffusion did not receive much time. The survey of "needs" will be conducted by the district committees of education. The projects to be classified as: (International), general Canada-wide, provincial, local. Diffusion channels need more study and possibly more detailed attention.

Calvin Studies Society formed at Second Colloquium

GRAND RAPIDS - What is the status of Calvin studies today? Are they taken more seriously now than in the past? From the Calvin literature we learn that ever since John Calvin's writings were published, friend and foe alike have analyzed, praised and criticized the thoughts of Calvin through the centuries.

Conferences specifically dealing with Calvin and Calvinism have also been held. At a recent conference, the Second Colloquium on Calvin and Calvin Studies, a "Calvin Studies Society" was formed. The Society chose as its officers, Dr. Ford Lewis Battles of Calvin Theological Seminary, president; Dr. John H. Leith of Union Theological Seminary in Virginia, vice-president; Peter De Klerk of Calvin Theological Seminary, secretary/treasurer; and three members-at-large, Dr. I. John Hesselink of Western Theological Seminary, Dr. Jill Raitt of Duke University and Dr. Joseph N. Tylenda of "Theological Studies".

Biblical theology for children

Two Spies on a Rooftop, by Marianne Radius; illustrated by Chris Stoffel Overvoorde; published by Baker Book House, Grand Rapids, 1978; paperback, 368 pages. Reviewed by Theodore Plantinga, St. Catharines, Ont.

Bible stories can be told to children in many different ways. In this unusual volume of Bible stories, we find a "biblical theology for young readers." The author, who is the daughter of Geerhardus Vos (a well-known theologian) and Catherine Vos (the author of a familiar story Bible), writes in the preface: "I have tried to show both the gradual unfolding of God's revelation of himself and the awakening religious understanding of God's people."

Central to the theological framework of this volume is the idea of "the tent of God" (the original title of the book). The author points out that we come across significant references to tents ail throughout the Old Testament. Especially important is the famous tent of meeting or tabernacle, by which God indicated in a concrete manner that he wished to dwell among his people. The author uses this theme to shed light on Christ's incarnation. God "tabernacled" with man; he pitched his tent among us, as it were.

The entire volume is animated by this high theological purpose. The final words are: "You and I are on a journey, a journey back to God. God does not watch our stumbling steps indifferently. He does not merely call us to return. No, our God goes with us. He walks within our very hearts."

approach to the Old Testament, we do not find undue emphasis on alleged shadows and types of Christ. The emphasis falls instead on the Immanuel promise — God with his people.

This book has some other unusual features. Many a story is told from the viewpoint of a character within the story. Jonathan's heroism at Michmash, for example, is narrated by his armor-bearer, which is surely a better choice than Jonathan himself! The completion and dedication of Solomon's temple is described through the eyes of a little boy who travels to Jerusalem with his family to celebrate the occasion.

The author varies her approach from story to story. Sometimes she begins with an element in the lives of children today and works back from such a point to the difficulties faced by the characters in the Bible story. But although she draws children into her story by addressing them directly, she does not talk down to them.

How is this book intended to be used? It can well be read at the table after supper, even though the stories are a bit long. The meaning of the stories comes out naturally, for the author devotes explicit attention to "application."

It seems to me that the book would also be useful for teachers in Sunday schools and Christian day schools as they prepare to teach Bible stories. The unity it seeks between story and redemptive perspective is what we should all strive for in dealing with Bible stories.

Children themselves, of course, will also be able to read this book with profit and enjoyment. Finally, parents can learn a good deal from working through it with their children. I know I did!

This book is now in circulation in two editions. The original hardcover edition (published by Eerdmans) is entitled The Tent of God. Baker Book House has just issues it as a reprint under the title Two Spies on a Rooftop (taken from the title of one of the stories).

This volume is restricted to Old Testament Bible stories. The author's treatment of the Bible stories about Jesus is available in a separate Eerdmans volume entitled God With Us, which has also been reprinted by Baker (new title: Ninety Story Sermons for Children's Church) reviewed here some time ago.

The Bible in narrative form

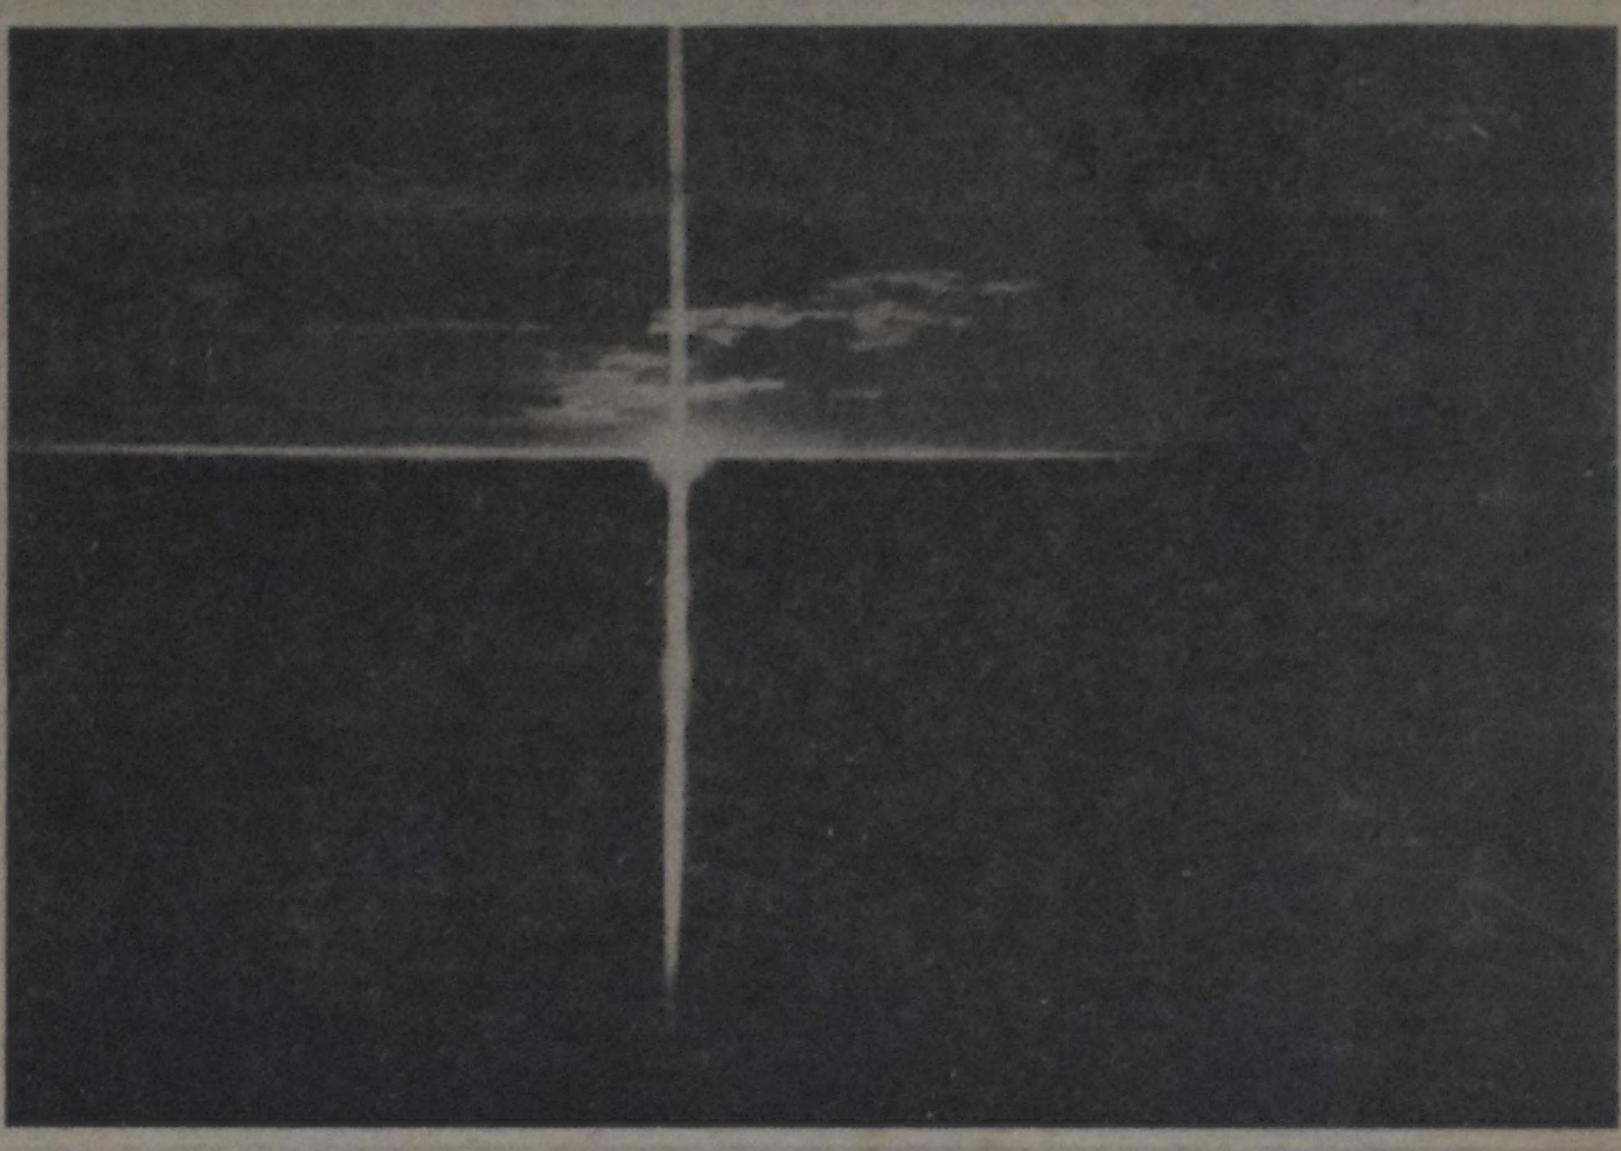

The Child's Story Bible by Catharine F. Vos; illustrations by Betty Beeby; published by Wm. B. Eerdmans, Grand Rapids, Michigan 1977; paperback, 436 pages. Reviewed by Harry A. de Vries.

The Child's Story Bible is not the latest of the story Bibles. It has been around since 1934 when it first appeared in part as Volume I. Two more volumes appeared in the next two years. And in 1940 it was printed as one book. Not until 1977 did it appear in paperback, illustrated by Mrs. Betty Beeby.

The National Union of Christian Schools (NUCS) has been involved in writing and rewriting of the Book from the beginning since it was first intended primarily for school use. Hence the Story Bible is neatly divided into appropriate sections and makes a point of keeping factual information accurate and well organized.

The Child's Story Bible is meant to be read and remembered. Mrs. Vos notes in the Dedication that she wrote the stories in much the same way that her mother told them to her when she was a child. It is therefore not simply a rephrasing of Scripture, but additional remarks about the setting and the customs of the time are also part of the stories. For example, the Story Book does not start immediately with the days of creation. Mrs. Vos first comments on the nature of God,

For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory. . . forever 22 22

Teaching Your Children to Pray by Colleen Townsend Evans; photographs by Walter Bredel; published by Galilee Books, Doubleday & Co., Toronto, Ont. 1978; cloth bound. Reviewed by Harry A. de Vries.

This book deals with individual words and lines of the Lord's Prayer. The part dealt with appears in bold, large print, accompanied by a brief explanation of that part of the Prayer in somewhat smaller type and an additional note in yet smaller type for older children and adults. A beautiful book to help teach the Lord's prayer. All that is needed is the time to use it.

the angels, heaven, and sin. But when she does deal with creation she tells the story as one would to children. "Created" she writes, "means made out of nothing. When a man builds a house, he must first have wood, nails, glass, and many other things. ... God made the world out of nothing at all." Or, when she writes about the creation of man's soul she points out that it is not the physical features of your mother that you love, but her soul, "something inside your mother, something you cannot exactly see or touch." Elementary, one might say, but really it is a narrative style typical of the book, a style children warm up to.

One minor irritating aspect of the Book is that quoted scripture passages still use the archaic St. James Version with its Thee's and Thou's

The illustrations, especially drawn for this edition, are quite colourful and depictive since recent archeological and Biblication information were used wherever possible. They are unique in their point of view and are certainly not quickly forgotten. They were intended to help children remember the stories. However, sometimes practical details seem to have been omitted. In the picture of Gideon's men holding the torches in the pitchers they later on break, they are shown holding them in an earthward direction, so that, seemingly, they are burning their hands. Or when the story mentions that Samson wrapped his arms around the pillars and pulled with all his strength, the illustration depicts him pushing the pillars. But it is still a vivid illustration because it indicates the size of the pillars, the large crowd of Philistines, and the strength of Samson.

The maps and the glossary are helpful in the reading of the stories.

The Child's Story Bible is written for 3 to 13 year olds, and it is written well. We have enjoyed reading it at supper time and, obviously, so have others for the past forty-five years.

Whatever the denomination, faith is still important

Searching for Truth. A Personal View of Roman Catholicism, by Peter Kelly, Introduction by Gregory Baur, published by Collins, St. James' Place, London, Great Britain; 192 pages; Price: $8.95. Reviewed by Rev. J.D. Tangelder.

In the wake of Vatican II, we are rapidly moving away from the notion that the Roman Catholic church is one solid body, united in faith and doctrine.

Traditional doctrines are under assault. In order to liberalize the church, a number of Roman Catholic theologians have started to re-interpret doctrine.

Peter Kelly served the Roman Catholic church for nearly thirtyeight years. He was born in Australia in 1915. After graduating in law, he entered the Jesuit order in 1938 and was ordained in 1949. He studied Canon Law in Rome for three years. He taught in Melbourne and Sidney. In 1968 he was appointed Provincial of the Jesuit order for Australia and Southeast Asia. In 1975 he left the Jesuit order. He is now Lecturer in Law at the University of Adelaide and is married with four teenage stepchildren.

Where did Kelly's spiritual pilgrimage lead him? He appropriated in his studies the whole "bag" of "biblical" criticism and new hermeneutics, and an existentialist re-interpretation of Scripture.

about God. He is influenced by John A.T. Robinson, the author of Honest to God, and process theology. "Contemporary Catholic theology," says Kelly, "Is reconciled to a developmental view of reality and speaks of God as a transcendent mystery operative in human history. God is here not conceived as an object of the human mind, however qualified; God is rather regarded, in various ways, as presupposition of human knowing and human loving, as ground of being, as matrix of human self-making, as man's ultimate future, as the horizon of meaning thanks to which people are able to make sense out of their history." "If the ultimate reality, the reason for it all, the last meaning, if this is intelligent and is not the universe itself but in some way beyond it (not of course beyond it in the old crude sense of distance, but beyond it in way of being), then this is really what can be called God" (p. 42).

Kelly denies the inspiration of Scripture. He sees no good reason for affirming the historicity of certain events recorded in the Bible. He believes that the claims of the Bible and the church do not stand up under the impact of modern critical scholarship. He says, "Some unwise statements passed out into the world as Catholic teaching (for example, that Moses wrote the first five books of the Old Testament; that the words placed in the mouth of Jesus in John's gospel were really said by Jesus". "No angels, so far as we can know, appeared to shepherds at Bethlehem, no star moved over the town, there was no wonderful calling or coming of wise men from the east. It is possible that Jesus was born at Nazareth, not Bethlehem, and that Bethlehem was written in by Matthew and Luke because of the Old Testament prophecy that the Messiah would come from there".

Keily gives a highly readable and excellent summary of contemporary liberal scholarship. But apparently he hasn't heard of the doctrine of justification by faith.

Kelly's search for truth will not be over until he comes to grips with the heart of the gospel, the atoning death of Christ and the sinner's acceptance of its benetits.
